Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Dec. 9; Agra and Madras, Dec. 7; Calcutta, Dec. 6.

FROM the Indian papers we gather the following particulars touching the preparations for the Loshai campaign. Some delay in moving the Cachar column had been caused by the slow drying of the country after unusually heavy floods. By the 22nd November however the 44th N.I. had reached Mainadhar, where the Sappers and some police were already at work making roads to the front. The 22nd Punjabies were to reach the same place on the 28th. General Bouchier was also there, looking after everything and getting all ready for the final start. The mountain guns and the 42nd N.I. had not left Cachar on the 29th, but the order to march was expected about the 1st December. Part of the road to Mainadhar is described as very difficult even for the elephants that were to carry the guns. The country through which it runs consists of jungle interspersed with steep hillocks, and there were doubts as to the power of the elephants to carry through it their ordinary loads. The troops were all in good spirits, and eager to go on. Better news had come from the Kala Rokha Camp, where Captain Hidayat Ali's coolies had been losing so many of their number—150 out of 800—from cholera. It seems that much of this loss might have been averted by better management at the outset. The coolies had been shamefully overcrowded in the flats that brought them to Chattak, and a proper supply of medicines and medical officers had somehow been forgotten at the right moment. Under Dr. White's active care however the cholera was fast disappearing. Great praise is given to the Commissariat and the local authorities for the energy with which they have pushed on the work of obtaining and forwarding supplies, in spite of obstacles thrown in their way by the natives. According to a letter in the Pioneer, these latter perversely declined to benefit by the high prices offered them, sunk their boats or hid them in unknown creeks, and, even after being forced to start, continually tried to throw their cargoes overboard and run away. The hard work and small pay they got on former occasions had sunk deep into their memories, and it was only by hunting them out of the bazaar that the Sappers could bring them to the starting point.

FROM the Bombay papers we learn that on the 9th December the Chittagong Column under General Brownlow was at Demagiri, ready to beat up the enemy whose scouts had begun to show themselves. A few days earlier the Hill Chief, Rattan Poya, had declared himself our friend, whereupon two companies of the 2nd Goorkas were at once quartered in his village. At Demagiri twenty-five acres of ground had been cleared for building a stockade and storerooms for the Commissariat. General Brownlow had reconnoitred Saidoha, a Loshai village subject to Rattan Poya. The weather was favourable, the troops in good health and spirits. The 27th Punjabies and the 4th Ghoorkas had gone on by river to join General Bouchier's or the left column. Five hundred muskets have been supplied to the troops of our ally, the Manipore Rajah. The escort which carried them off were delighted with their new weapons, their old matchlocks being so unwieldy that two men were always needed to make one of them go off. The escort were accompanied by a body of Naga coolies whose Mongol countenances and savage finery of beads and brass necklaces attracted the wondering scrutiny of the Sikhs in camp.

THE Lieutenant-governor of Bengal was ill with fever, and the meeting of the Legislative Council had therefore been postponed. It was rumoured that Mr. Campbell intended shortly to retire, but rumours of that sort are always flying about, and may generally be traced to somebody whose wish was father to the thought. There is greater certainty, we are sorry to hear, about the rumoured retirement of Mr. Fitzjames Stephen. In all likelihood he will leave India never to return. One good legacy he will yet leave behind him, if it be true that both sections of Brahmins have at length approved of the revised Brahma Marriage Bill, and that some measure of the kind so long projected has probably by this time become law.

THE papers are full of certain official correspondence bearing on the punishment inflicted upon Mr. Roberts, the suspended magistrate of Calcutta, by the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal. Calcutta is divided in opinion as to the justice of the course pursued, and publicly defended by Mr. Campbell in his minute of the 28th November. To judge however from this document alone, we can well understand why the drift of Calcutta feeling sets strongly in favour of its Chief Magistrate. In the unseemly quarrel which came to an open head between Mr. Roberts and Mr. Hogg, in the former's court, both certainly waxed warm in manner and violent in language. But the former at any rate could plead grave provocation, and his own letter to Mr. Campbell shows what that provocation was. Mr. Campbell himself owns that Mr. Hogg was "by no means free from blame;" indeed he is not quite sure that Mr. Hogg "has not been as indiscreet as Mr. Roberts in some subsequent matters." But, in spite of the Magistrate's own statement and the support it receives from that of the Deputy Commissioner of Police, his Honour holds that Mr. Roberts virtually began the quarrel and gave the deeper offence. The Commissioner of Police therefore is only reprimanded, while the Chief Magistrate of Calcutta is removed from his office, ostensibly for his share in the recent quarrel, but really perhaps for the bold part he has so often played in Municipal disputes.

WE regret to see that Colonel Lowe, Assistant Commissary General in Bengal, has been found guilty of seven out of the eleven charges brought against him, and, in spite of the Court's recommendation, has been cashiered. Lord Napier remarks that three out of the seven charges are of too grave a nature—including as they do the making of false returns and the destruction of public accounts—to justify any mitigation of the sentence awarded him. Lieutenant Colonel Keer has conscientiously “performed a most painful duty,” and the same thing may now be said of Lord Napier himself.

It is stated that the Madras and Bombay Civil Service have accepted the terms offered by the Home Government for the surrender of their accumulated Annuity Funds.

THE appeal in the case of the Wahabi prisoners was not finished when the mail left Bombay. But we know by telegram that the sentence on Ameer Khan and another has been sustained, while the other prisoners have been acquitted.

LATEST telegrams from Calcutta continue to give good reports of the Loshai Expedition. By the 21st December, a week after his first surprise of a Syloo village, General Brownlow with the Chittagong Column had destroyed several more villages and stores after a feeble resistance, with the loss of only one Ghorka killed. On the 23rd General Bouchier's Cachar Column had reached Kolell after repelling an attack of Loshais who were followed up till nightfall. The British loss was four slain and as many wounded. The Syloos are described as showing no desire to treat. Our troops are said to be suspicious of their Loshai allies, who leave them to do the fighting. So far at any rate we are glad to see that the absence of English soldiers has not told upon the martial bearing of either column. We have every trust in Lord Napier's capacity to plan and in that of his generals to carry out the campaign thus hopefully begun; but it will be a relief to most of us to hear of its successful issue, and of the safe return of our troops from the wilderness of swampy jungle in which they are now moving.

A CALCUTTA telegram of December 30 announces the death of Archdeacon Pratt, formerly chaplain to Bishop Wilson and afterwards promoted to the Archdeaconry of Calcutta. He died at Ghazipore, it seems, of choleraic diarrhoea, while he was on a visitation tour. The late archdeacon had left his mark not only as a churchman, but as a scholar and man of science, and his death will be widely regretted.

WE regret to see that the grievance to which a second correspondent refers in the letter we publish to-day has not yet been redressed. The wording of the General Order from which he quotes is so plain, that no amount of logical twisting can justify the withholding of half his Indian pay from any officer who on the strength of that order proceeds to take out his balance of furlough in the manner specified. It is absurd to argue that the order applies only to those who come home direct on sick leave, and not to those also who obtain sick leave after their return to England. No eye, however microscopic, can really detect in such an order any trace of an assumed intention to confine its working to officers who fall sick in India only. In the case now cited the hardship of being placed on English pay is seriously enhanced by the loss of a good Indian appointment, which the sufferer had to forfeit on taking extended leave on medical certificate. De minimis non curat lex; but a different maxim should guide the policy of the India Office.

THE judgment lately delivered by the Privy Council in the case of Victoria Skinner may be good law, but in the eyes of common sense it will probably appear very like gross injustice. Victoria Skinner's grandfather, Colonel Skinner, the half-bred Englishman who made the fame of Skinner's Horse in the fighting days of Lake, Ochterlony, and Combermere, called himself a Christian, but in his general way of life was virtually a Musulman. One of his fourteen native wives and concubines bore him a son, George Skinner, who was killed at Delhi in 1857, leaving behind him a Mohammedan widow and her infant daughter, Victoria. In 1867 the widow, Padshah Begum or Helen Skinner, became second or third living wife of a Mr. John Thomas John, who had exchanged Christianity for the more convenient creed of Islam. As Victoria grew up, the strife between her kinsfolk as to the question of her future faith and guardians began. The girl herself at fourteen years of age avows her own attachment to her mother's creed and her deep unwillingness to leave her mother's care; and her mother is equally loath to give her up. But the long dead father was a nominal Christian, the mother is married to a man of doubtful repute, and the daughter is considered too young to judge for herself. So the wise men who interpret our wise old laws have raised the ghost of Victoria's father in stern antagonism to her own wishes and the natural claims of her surviving parent. The girl herself, being three-fourths Indian, is probably old enough to have some voice in the matter; but the judges, acting up to the letter of English law, treat her as an intellectual infant, and drag her out from the congenial privacy of the purdah in uncompromising deference to the supposed intentions of a father who died during her babyhood, and who, if he had lived, would most probably have left the choice of her religion to her mother and herself. It is, we believe, a well-known fact in India that the sons of Colonel Skinner mixed much more freely with the native gentry of Delhi than with their English neighbours, and held extremely liberal views on religious questions. But the law apparently has nothing to do with the feelings of either mother or daughter, so long as they seem to conflict with assumptions founded on the father's implied Christianity. In the teeth, therefore, of every principle dear to modern society, the judges have obeyed the law of other days by removing the girl from her mother's guardianship, and transferring her to the care of an English schoolmistress until she is old enough to make her own choice between the Bible and the Koran. From one source of comfort, however, she is not to be wholly debarred. Her mother is allowed to go and visit her now and then.

AN “Unwilling Idler,” in a letter to the Times, points in a few telling sentences a moral which the home Government of India would do well to ponder without delay. The story he tells might be capped by hundreds more of the same kind. He is a major in the Bengal Staff Corps, who draws £768 a-year from the Indian Treasury for “doing nothing.” He has seen some hard service, and is known to be a good officer, but for want of personal interest can get nothing to do beyond that “general duty” to which so many of his comrades are condemned. In the last drilling season all he had to do for five months was to visit the station-guards four times a week on two occasions, to preside once at a Committee on new blankets, and to serve on one other committee on some trifling article. In the hot weather he goes to the Hills as often as he can. In three years more his pay for doing nothing will amount to £948 a-year. To retire on the noble pension of £191 a-year, the sum fixed nearly a century ago when money went twice as far as it does now, is of course out of the question for such an officer, who can get no bonus now from his juniors in aid of the pension; so he must hang on to “general duty” until he can retire on the Colonel's allowances of £1,124 a-year. He himself, and doubtless many others in the same position, would gladly cry quits with the Indian Government for an immediate pension of £500 a-year and leave to spend it where they please. By such a compromise the Government in his own case would save a total of £6,612 up to the date of his retirement on Colonel's allowances, and £624 a-year afterwards. Is not this a matter worth considering? There must be hundreds of officers in much the same position. On the 1st April last, out of a total strength of about 3,000 Indian officers 599 were virtually unemployed, of whom only thirty-six were subalterns. To these add the 488 on furlough, and you have more than a third of the whole army employed in doing nothing. Many of these idlers may of course die off in time or be driven by ill-health into taking the miserable pensions now open to them; but by far the greater number will certainly continue to draw full pay in India as long as they can, recruiting their health by timely visits to Europe, until they see their way to retiring altogether. What possible loss then could the Indian Government incur by offering fair terms at once to men like this “Unwilling Idler?” How indeed can it ever hope to justify itself in the eyes of sound economists, to say nothing of the Indian tax-payer, by any further withholding of a compromise which must inevitably result in saving hundreds of thousands of pounds to the Indian Exchequer? Common expediency, to take no higher ground, demands prompt action in a case of this kind. These hundreds of unwilling idlers decline to die quickly. They decline to starve at home on £191 a-year. They cannot be forced home against their will. Their continued presence in India is a needless burden on the Indian finances, and a source of great moral harm to the service and themselves. Is it not better in all ways to buy them off on fair terms, than to trust to a combination of doubtful chances for their final disappearance from the service-lists of the Indian Army? It is not yet too late for the India Office to reconsider its flat rejection of the scheme proposed to this end by Lord Mayo's Government.

THERE are two questions indeed which might well be considered together. The grievances of the unemployed field-officers have a direct bearing on another great grievance, namely, the present rates of retiring pensions. We regret to hear that the India Office has already refused to consider the need of revising a scale of pension manifestly unsuited to the requirements of the present day. What earthly inducement can anyone have to spend twenty years in a country like India, for the sake of retiring on £191 a-year, a rate fixed some ninety years ago? Does any reasonable being expect an old officer to live decently on such a pittance in these days of high rents and general struggling for a bare livelihood? Before the Mutiny, when living in India was cheaper, he might perhaps save a little from his pay, and he could always reckon upon the bonus which the Court of Directors formally allowed him to take from his juniors as a substitute for an increased pension. Had the Bonus system not been sanctioned in 1837, the old Company would have had to remedy the growing evil of stagnant promotion, of an army overburdened with old officers, by largely increasing the pensions which even then were found to be much too low. How much more need, then, for raising those pensions now! Remember, too, what has lately been done to better the condition of an officer at home on furlough. The lowest pay he can now receive on furlough is £250 a-year, or at least a third more than the oldest lieutenant, with the aid of his Funds, ever got before. If such be the limit fixed for a young officer on furlough, can there be any just excuse for not granting a corresponding increase to the retiring pensions? After twenty years' Indian service nothing less than £350 a-year should be deemed a fair return for work fairly done in such a climate. It might also be feasible to offer a pension of about £200 a-year at the end of fifteen or sixteen years' service. After twenty-five years in India an officer should be entitled to a pension of five or six hundred a-year, with a moderate increase for every three years more of actual service. The cost of these additions would be more than covered by the money that could be saved in purchasing the retirement of unemployed field-officers. Such a revision of pensions would of course include the case of those officers who have to retire through ill-health on the half-pay of their rank.

AN increase of retiring-pensions might go some way towards solving the Bonus problem also. We assume that, in face of recent events, something like full compensation will have to be granted for the long-standing Bonus claims. Would it not therefore be well to ascertain how many of the claimants would compound for the payment of a lump sum down by accepting a certain increase of their yearly pensions instead, reckoned from the date of their retirement? There are probably not a few who would choose the alternative that weighed least upon the finances of the Indian Government.

THE Committee of the Indian Army Defence Institution has just issued a Circular pointing out the grievances for whose redress the Institution means to agitate. Among these may be noted—

"The refusal of a fair and reasonable compensation to the numerous officers who, having paid the normal bonus to their seniors on retirement, are now precluded from receiving in their turn the bonus which, under the Company's regime, they were entitled to expect, and which, in fact, they considered as safely insured to them under the sanction of their Government, as any ordinary tontine assurance on which a premium has been paid. In addition to this may be named the threatened action, under high official influence, which aims at enforcing compulsory retirement on officers who have spent their best years in Indian service, and who cannot afford, especially if deprived of the bonus which they always hoped to obtain, to live on a small pension in England."

These and any other "valid and legitimate grievances" of like character which old Indian officers may bring forward the Committee propose to press, by all lawful means, on the attention of the State authorities, appealing for help if needful to the Legislature itself. Subscriptions are invited from all concerned, addressed to the care of Messrs. King and Co., 45, Pall Mall. Such is the pith of the document which we hope next week to print in full. For the same issue we reserve the memorial now being signed in India by the claimants of Bonus compensation.

THE changes lately made in the establishment of the India Office take effect from the 1st inst. The offices of Assistant Under Secretary of State and of Secretary in the Revenue Department have been abolished, the Revenue Department being combined with the Judicial and Public. The office of Accountant General has also been abolished, and the department will in future be a branch of the Financial Department, Mr. T. W. Keith being accountant. Mr. Markham, assistant in the Public Works Department, has been transferred in the same capacity to the Revenue Department, his place in the Public Works Department being taken by Mr. Waterfield.

EXPERIENCES OF AN INDIAN "POLITICAL."

GOOD wine, says the old proverb, needs no bush, and the name of General Sir G. Jacob may be taken as a sufficient guarantee for the truthfulness and interest of the tale he has given to the world in his little volume on "Western India before and during the Mutinies," lately published by Messrs. King and Co. of Cornhill. In looking at these "Pictures drawn from Life," we are reminded of the important services which English officers in India have rendered to their country in other fields than those of war, under conditions often of the most disheartening kind. Sir Charles Napier's abuse of the Anglo-Indian "Political" reflected a feeling widely shared by his military countrymen in India, who either envied the good luck of a comrade drawn away from the dull round of regimental duty, or owed him a grudge for the interference which brought a promising campaign to a premature close. Such feelings, however natural, were by no means fair to a body of men who have served their masters on the whole with signal zeal and ability, proving equal to any need, and gaining their object oftener by moral suasion than by appeals to brute force. Equally ready with their brains or their right arms, were the men of this class who came to the front during the nightmare days of the Great Mutiny. In fit company with Nicholson, Edwards, Willoughby, Osborne, Macpherson, may be placed the Political Officer whose clear head and quick movements helped to save Western India from the disasters which overtook the North-Western Provinces and Bengal. When the 27th N.I. broke into open mutiny at Kolapore on the night of July 31, 1857, shooting down three of their own officers and plundering the bungalows of those who got away in time, General Jacob, fresh from the Persian campaign under Outram, was hurried off from Bombay to command the troops in the Southern Mahratta States, a country ruled for the most part by native princes of the house of Sivaji, whose ministers were always ready to intrigue against the British Government. Of the people in these States he had gained some knowledge during the six years he had held charge of the Sawant Wari district, from the outbreak of the rebellion there in 1844-5; but his new position was not an easy one, in spite of the check given to the mutineers by Lieutenant Kerr a few days before his arrival. No time however was lost in taking the bold step of disarming the whole of the mutinous regiment with the aid of a handful of European soldiers and a few guns. A score of the ringleaders were at once hanged, shot, or blown from guns, and some thirty more ere long shared the same fate. Some of those who had first sat in judgment on their own comrades were afterwards convicted and condemned to death in their turn. There seemed to be a general feeling among the Sepoys that the days of our rule were numbered. One deserter from the 27th N.I. was caught in his own village. "Where was I to go?" he pleaded; "all the world said the English Raj had come to an end, and so being a quiet man, I thought the best place to take refuge in was my own home." At such a time indeed what else could a quiet-minded Sepoy do?

The danger quelled for a time was not yet over. In December General Jacob got timely warning of a plot hatched between some natives of Kolapore and their armed friends outside, for the admission of the latter into the town. This too was marred by his promptitude in forcing a way inside and disarming the garrison. Chimmah Sahib, one of the two Kolapore Rajahs, was evidently concerned in a plot which, but for this counterstroke, might have grown into a formidable rising. The country was in a very combustible state, and one false step would have lighted up a general blaze. A band of rebels, old insurgents of 1844, beat up the Sawant Wari country in 1858, but none of their countrymen from those parts joined their ranks, and they were gradually but surely hunted down, thanks to the help furnished us by the Portuguese Governor of Goa. Chimmah Sahib was sent to die a State prisoner in Sindh. Among those with whom he had corresponded were Nana Sahib and the rebels at Gwalior and Lucknow. So wide a network of conspiracy then covered the land that, when Chimmah Sahib's Minister was advised by an old friend to make a clean breast of it, his only answer was, "Were I to open my mouth, I should kindle a flame to burn up the land. I choose rather to meet my fate in silence." Some of those who seemed most actively loyal were afterwards found to have been most deeply entangled in plots against our rule. General Jacob himself had a narrow escape from a plot to murder him, formed by some rebels in concert with the Naik whom he had placed at the head of his own native guard. The Kolapore plotters had also been corresponding with their friends at Belgaum, but against these latter General Lester took such measures as soon marred their little game. One of the Belgaum ringleaders was a monshee of the Wahabi sect who had been a favourite with the officers whom he taught. Much of the disaffection then rife in the Southern Mahratta States was ascribed by the author to the working of the Inam Commission, which was "looked upon with distrust and alarm throughout the country." That a Court armed with summary power to examine old titles to landed property must have added largely to the number of our enemies, may readily be conceived, and the murder of Mr. Manson by the Nurgood Chief, Baba Sahib, was partly due to the ill-feeling roused against an Inam Commissioner, who had also had a hand in denying to Baba Sahib the right of adopting an heir to his estates.

The earlier part of General Jacob's memoir describes his former experiences as a Political in various parts of Western India. After an instructive account of the long contest between two rival ladies, a mother and daughter, for the sovereignty of Wudwan in Guzerat, he proceeds to unfold the plots and counterplots which disturbed the adjoining State of Limree in 1837, on the death of its young Rajah without direct heirs. It is a curious tale of Asiatic intrigue, in the attempt to unravel which the author himself was nearly carried off by poison. A still more serious case of disputed succession occurred at Joonaghur, where General Jacob's presence of mind alone saved him from a violent death at the hands of an excited Arab crowd. His promptitude in taking the field against some Joonaghur rebels drew upon him the censure of his own Government, but his seeming rashness was fully justified by the issue. Other chapters contain interesting notices of native manners and suggestive glimpses into the minor troubles that await a Political Officer in a native State.

SOMNATH GATES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In page 1234 of your Paper of the 26th inst. I see "the gates never got beyond a lumber room" in the Fort of Agra. Permit me to say that I saw them at the head of the armoury room in the Fort Magazine, and as I subsequently heard that the arsenal was to be abolished, I expressed a hope the authorities of the British Museum would try to get them removed to their custody instead of seeing that beautiful work or art consigned to oblivion.

When the gates reached Ferozepore, the rumour ran that they were made of fir, so I induced a friend to engage the sentries in conversation while I shaved a bit off with my pen knife, and on burning it found it to be veritably Sandal wood; and I am equally certain from the careful inspection I made, that the whole body of the gates was formed from the same wood, which appeared to be of so great an age that nothing but the burning of a bit would have convinced me as to its quality.—Yours faithfully,

GWALIOR.

OUR SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—There has recently been some discussion regarding the comparative mortality among our young and old soldiers in India. The Times, in an article on the 21st December, appears to doubt whether young or old soldiers stand the climate the better, and one of its correspondents thinks that the soldiers are too much coddled, and are being thus rendered unfit to endure hardships when the outbreak of war shall require their services in the field, where they will be exposed to sunstroke in the hot weather.

In these discussions the public in England are apt to lose sight of the true causes of death and disease. Whether a soldier be 19 or 39 years of age, syphilis, alcohol, palatial ovens, and idleness will kill him, and no men have livers which can resist the effects produced by excessive eating and drinking with the thermometer at 90 degrees. A soldier is not the less fitted for war by being taken care of in times of peace.

In these days of inactivity, venereal diseases cause the greatest ravages among the soldiery. It is terrible to think of the number of good soldiers who have been killed, invalided, and debilitated by them. The Government in its despair has had recourse to Contagious Diseases Acts, suitable, perhaps, for tyrannical governments, but most unbecoming in the freest country in the world.

There is another easy remedy. Let well-conducted soldiers be permitted to marry after five years' good service, and thousands of valuable lives will be preserved for the service of the country. The hope of a happy marriage, of a staff appointment, and of a nice cottage and garden, and children in the Hills, would preserve thousands from the company of diseased prostitutes. Let officers and other gentlemen fancy themselves in the position of private soldiers, practically debarred from marriage? How would the best educated among them be able to withstand the temptations of lust?

Another cause of disease among soldiers, young and old, is the excessive use of alcohol; but drunkenness has, I believe, greatly decreased since Government has supplied abundantly good beer to the regimental canteens.

The heavy meat dinners which soldiers eat early in the afternoon during the hot weather must injure their livers. We lost twenty-one European soldiers by sunstroke in May 1858, by marching only six miles after dinner, from Bhugwuntnuggur to Simree.

The palatial ovens, which Government has of late years delighted to build for its soldiers, are also apt to excite liver diseases. Colonel Crommelin some years ago reported on the subject of barracks in the Plains, and the various provincial Governments were invited to offer their opinions. The Government of the Punjab suggested that soldiers should be accommodated in cool thatched buildings, but the Supreme Government preferred huge masonry edifices. The correspondence on the subject is instructive, and should be laid before Parliament. Do not officers and civilians prefer thatched houses on account of their coolness? I have never seen British soldiers in the plains of India look more healthy than when accommodated in thatched huts.

I am unable to understand why European soldiers are still kept in unhealthy cantonments. Now that India is being gradually traversed with railroads, we have no excuse for locating English soldiers in unhealthy positions. A sufficient number must be retained in the plains for the duty of protecting arsenals, but all the rest should be in the Hills during the hot weather. Why are English soldiers stationed at Jubbulpoor, where the malaria is apt to produce fever and cholera? Troops can, in a few hours, be poured into the Nerbuddah territories, either from Allahabad or Bombay.

The sixth great cause of disease among soldiers is want of occupation. During the hot weather the days are very long, and there is nothing to be done. Native soldiers occupy much of their time with the amusement of wrestling. For Europeans various attempts have been made to supply occupation. Reading-rooms, workshops, gardens, skittle alleys, and baths have been provided, but the true remedy for weary idleness is employment out of doors in the cool climate of the Hills.

It may be argued that in the event of a rebellion the army could not descend from the Hills with sufficient speed. The civil officers are not worth their salt unless they can give timely warning. Railways now convey troops with rapidity, and the populations of India would be much more impressed by the knowledge of the existence of a strong unseen army in the Hills than by the sight of full hospitals and crowded burial grounds in the Plains.—Your obedient servant, T.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

I beg to offer a few remarks on a letter that has appeared in the Times of the 23rd inst., on the health of the Indian army and signed, "An Old Soldier."

The particular part of the letter I wish to comment on, is that in which he speaks of what he calls the "coddling up" of the European soldier. He says, "The European troops are confined to their barracks ordinarily from six or seven in the morning to the same hours in the evening, at the hot stations, while every possible means is resorted to to keep down the temperature by thermantidotes, punkahs, &c., until the European soldier becomes a 'coddled up' being more or less incapable of action on a sudden emergency in the hot weather. The very means we now resort to to keep our European troops alive in India must infallibly tend to their destruction if brought out to march under exposure to climate." Now this view of a wise and judicious system of management I consider to be an entirely erroneous one. The "coddling up" system, if we choose to call it so, pursued during the hot weather, has a most materially beneficial effect upon the health of our European troops in India; and I cannot believe that it has ever been found to impair their efficiency in any way.

The effect of the direct action of the sun's rays on the human frame is different from anything else. At least this is true in regard to the European constitution, and more than this it is true that we cannot, by any system of training or "seasoning," so alter the European constitution as to give it the power to resist the injurious effects of the sun's rays. In regard to many influences we do much by a system of training to modify their action upon the human frame. Soldiers well trained and in good condition may endure cold, fatigue—and even damp they may withstand without much injury. The theory of hardening is quite correct here, and well hardened or seasoned they can be made to do a wonderful deal of work. Not so in respect to "heat"—or rather direct "sun heat." Heat has a weakening influence, and exposure to it beyond a certain point, has a tendency to impair the constitution, and consequently to lessen its power of resistance or endurance when circumstances require that power to be called forth. Taking the view of the case I mention—that a regiment of European soldiers is the better of being nursed or coddled during the hot weather, and that it is well to take advantage of all the appliances we possess to shield them from the effects of extreme heat, it will be found, I believe, that a regiment so cared for, in the event of any sudden emergency requiring it to take the field during the hot months will be in a state of greater efficiency than would have been the case had no such means of care been resorted to. It is well known that officers generally suffer less from the effects of climate in India than do the ordinary soldiers. And why so? Simply because they take greater care of themselves—have more means of comfort and protection from the sun's heat. I know there are some men who despise these means; who make a boast that they can go about in all weathers—hot or cold weather is nothing to them—but these are men of adamantine constitution—they are made of tough, strong material—they are men of iron—and happily free from the bodily weaknesses which afflict and distress, more or less, the greater number of ordinary mortals. In a regiment of European soldiers such men are the few, not the many, and our system of management ought to be so regulated as to preserve the "weaklings," and to keep them, as far as possible, in a state of efficiency. But I have met with men whose ideas on this subject are different—men of the good old school, perhaps. They would think it right to have full dress parades as often as possible, and delight even to keep the men out till a late hour in the morning under an overpowering sun. If some few fell out it would matter little; they can be sent to the hospital, where the doctor can look after them. Such sturdy veterans have in general an abhorrence of cotton and calico; and, in fact, the means and contrivances used to mitigate the effects of climate, and give personal ease and comfort to the soldier while on duty, they view with very great suspicion, if not dislike.

The "Old Soldier" in his letter compares the condition of European troops in India at this moment to that of geraniums, or tender plants that we shut up in conservatories during the winter. The comparison is excellent, and true in every point. We Europeans are exotics in India, and by no system of training or "hardening" can we be made to be anything else. We cannot reverse the order of nature, and give to the European constitution a power to withstand climatic influences such as that possessed by the native of India. A native will bask under the intense glare of an Indian noonday sun, and be no way inconvenienced. A stripling child, only a few days old perhaps, we may see crawling about in open day, and taking no hurt from a heat that would very soon cause the death of an English child in like circumstances. Our management of the European, therefore, in India, must be guided by conditions altogether different from what we have in England. We house tender plants to keep them from the cold—and just in the same way we must house and carefully protect our precious Europeans from the baneful effects of a climate for which nature has not intended them. This applies only to the hot weather, but restrictions as to exposure at other times there need not be. I do not think the "housing" of a European Regiment during the hot months will at all diminish its fitness for plenty of hard work when that season ends.

The "Old Soldier" makes one remark which is striking. Referring to what he calls the "coddling" system, he says:—"Young European soldiers may, under such peculiar circumstances, live as long or longer than old ones." I may ask is not this a desirable result?

I agree with the writer that a man is at his best as a "seasoned soldier" after ten or twelve years' service. But how are we to get these old seasoned soldiers except by taking care of the young soldiers during the first years of their service in a strange climate?

I offer these remarks with diffidence on the subject treated of by an "Old Soldier" of fifty years' standing. I cannot boast of a long experience like his, but at the same time I cannot concur in all his views.—Yours, &c. ANGLIO-INDIAN.

"THE MEANING OF WORDS."

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Having read the letter headed "Sic Volo Sic Jubeo," which you published on the 28th ult., I have been hoping to see the remonstrance meet with relief, but from the silence of the Gazette that hope seems to have been premature.

Though not personally interested in that particular question, yet, in common with others, I watch with some interest the settlement of this complaint, as the principles involved in one such decision must affect the Services generally in all decisions.

The orders issued by Government are read literally, and their language is not considered to be according to Talleyrand's definition a means of concealing ideas. With this understanding G.G.O. No. 627 of 1860 is read, and it makes known that "an officer who has any balance of furlough due to him, although he may not have served three years from date of last return to duty, will on obtaining furlough on medical certificate be entitled to receive half the Indian pay of his rank for the entire period not exceeding two years." So of course every one believes that an officer can claim his balance of furlough and the pay attached to it.

But there was a concealed idea in the order, which is brought to light by an announcement that it was not intended to give Indian pay to officers who obtain sick leave under Rule XI. of 1868, though no such reservation had or has been published.

The world generally condemns Pat in the story of his being offered a donkey at the hire of a shilling for the first hour and of sixpence for each consecutive hour. These were the terms, and to them the hirer agreed generally, but he would pay only sixpence for every hour as he intended to begin at the second hour. Does not the reasoning in this case seem parallel? It is sad to read of a Defence Institution for the protection of their assailed rights being necessary for the body of Indian officers; but the real origin of such mistrust of their masters by a patient and loyal army lies in the strained readings of orders which effect a small saving to the Exchequer at the expense of much general discontent and of serious loss to individuals.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A. B.

UNPOPULARITY OF ENGLISH RULE.

The Bombay Gazette does not think that foreign rule is sufficient to account for the feeling of dislike which it believes to exist. For after all the Hindoo is a patient race, accustomed to foreign rule and perfectly willing, if unmolested, to acquiesce in a condition to which he was born and against which he knows it would be madness to rise. Moreover, he knows that the British yoke is in many ways lighter than any other yoke to which his neck is likely to be bowed. Respect for law, truth, honesty of intention, commercial and material progress, a willingness to live and let live, no desire for foreign war or further conquest, all these qualities are ascribed to the English; but with them that selfish Philistinism, that "brutality" of which Mr. Matthew Arnold talks, which rides roughshod over all feelings not entirely English, and in which can be found the secret of our present unpopularity. Our unpopularity would thus appear to be based both upon constant changes and our want of sympathy with native feelings in respect of rank and precedence. On both these points our district administration breaks down. The district officers are constantly being shifted from one collectorate to another, so that the people have only just become accustomed to their views of revenue and general administration when they are called upon to submit to the sweepings of a new broom. On the other hand, the collectors and their assistants now-a-days treat the native gentry within their charges in a very different way from that of the old school of collectors. If a Sirdar or Jaghirdar comes to visit the Saheb, he is treated with no more distinction than if he were a vakeel or a trader, and he seldom returns home without a feeling of having been snubbed, if not abused. The greatest statesman that the Civil Service has ever produced, Mountstuart Elphinstone, some fifty years ago left on record the instructions which he deemed it politic to issue to the collectors under him, and his farseeing wisdom dealt particularly with the two evils which he foresaw would spring up under our rule, viz., constant tendency to change, and want of courtesy to the native aristocracy. On the first point he wrote:—"Our leading principles should be to abolish farming, but otherwise maintain the native system; to make the assessments light; to impose no new taxes; and to do none away unless obvious and unjust; and above all, to make no innovations." On the second point he wrote still more emphatically—"Something may be done to lessen the separation between native and English gentlemen by imitating the facilities of access which were conspicuous under the Maratha chiefs. The continuance of our popularity must mainly depend on this. The great means of keeping it up is for gentlemen to receive the natives often when not on business. There may be considerable difficulties in this, but it ought to be remembered that this intercourse with the natives is as much a point of duty, and contributes as much towards good government as the details in which we are generally occupied." How far these golden rules have been carried out we leave our up-country readers to judge. From all we learn the intercourse between district officers and the native gentry has practically ceased; whilst even in Bombay and Poona large durbars held by the Governor are mainly events of past history. And not only have natives received small social distinctions at the hands of the ruling caste, but even the influence which certain classes possessed amongst their fellow-countrymen has disappeared under our centralising rule. What patel of a village ever acts on his own responsibility, or feels that he is anything else than a sham? The powers with which police patels might be invested under the Village Police Act are rarely bestowed, and the only consideration which village officers receive at the hands of the collectors consist in an equivocal "Pan-sooparee" given at Jummabundi time. Where, again, are the Panchayets, the Shastrees, and other legal referees whom it was our policy formerly to consult? All social landmarks have disappeared, and there is no fixed policy or aim of Government which can enable us to look forward to a wiser future.

THE NATIVE ARMY AND ITS EUROPEAN OFFICERS.

The Pioneer thinks it is imperative that there should be an increase of regimental officers. The present complement is notably insufficient. Were it not that the events of the last twelve years, the almost unanimous recommendation of all who have studied the subject, and the confession of insufficiency which has been wrung from the authorities at all critical moments, warrant our doing so, we should hesitate to make a proposal which will inevitably be frowned upon by the influential section of penny-wise and pound-foolish statesmen. But we are supported by the most incontrovertible evidence. There are records to show that at the siege of Delhi the first prayer of commandants of native regiments was for more European officers. Again, in the China expedition, the Umballa raid, the Bhutan affair, and the Abyssinian campaign, the same demand was made, and had to be conceded. To China Probbyn's Horse took eleven and Fane's eight extra officers, while four regiments of native infantry exceeded their establishments by thirty-five European officers. The general orders of the day will tell the same tale with respect to subsequent campaigns. No comment is necessary in the face of such facts. It follows, then, that we must, or at any rate that we should, augment regimental cadres if we wish to have our army on a war footing. We ask for no more than the addition to each infantry regiment of one second in command (the equivalent of a major in British regiments), one officer of the rank of wing officer, and four wing subalterns; and to each cavalry regiment one second in command, one squadron subaltern, and one quartermaster, thus raising the complement of the former to thirteen and of the latter to ten. The title of wing officer and wing subaltern would become inappropriate, as each officer would superintend two instead of three companies. By this means we should disassociate the second in command from the wing and squadron appointments, and give a quartermaster to the cavalry which requires one far more than the infantry. The present rates of pay are extremely liberal; but it might be advantageous to institute a small ascending scale of salaries among wing and squadron officers just sufficient to mark the difference of grades, while the second in command might be allowed a slightly higher salary than the senior wing officer. The same system of Staff Corps promotion should continue in operation, and should be entirely irrespective of regimental appointments. An officer once posted to a regiment should belong to it, and it alone, until he leaves the service, enters the civil branch, or is promoted to major-general. We do not pretend to say that by these measures we should have achieved more than a respectable tinkering; but we are forced to bow to the spirit of the times, and shall be content with small things, hoping that time will do the rest.

HOPE FOR INDIAN VETERANS.

The Times of India reverts once more to the well-worn question of bonus compensation for officers of the old Indian army. This, it says, we can readily do by referring to a letter below from an indefatigable advocate of his own and his comrades' rights, Col. J. C. Phillips, of the Bengal army, and President of the Bonus Committee. He draws attention afresh to what has long been observed, namely, that the Army Regulation Bill of last session concedes, in regard to those regiments analogous to the Indian army, all that we and the officers contended for in respect of these bonus claims. The clause in question runs thus:—"The Commissioners have the power to consider the claims, on retirement, of any officers who, on the said appointed day, are serving in the regiments of the line following, that is to say, the cavalry regiments numbering 19, 20, and 21, and the infantry regiments numbering from 101 to 109, both inclusive, and to grant to such officers when permitted to retire a compensation equal to the sums they would have received according to the custom of their regiment from the junior officers of their regiments, had they retired therefrom prior to the said appointed day." Certainly, if those who drafted Mr. Cardwell's Bill had desired to set forth the principle for which Indian officers and their advocates have contended in respect of the bonus claims, they could not have stated it more neatly than in this clause—"to grant to such officers (when permitted to retire) a compensation equal to the sums they would have received according to the custom of their regiment from the junior officers of their regiment, had they retired, &c." We need not apologise for this repetition. These plain words will revive hope deferred in many an Anglo-Indian home. No doubt, after all the patching and attempts at compromise in respect of bonus claims we have had, the subject is a good deal complicated in detail. Some few have received as much as they could expect; others, while accepting a very inadequate dividend, may have formally relinquished further claim; while the mass of claimants have been tantalised by the pittance offered under Lord Cranbourne's committees, or too disgusted to make any application at all. But, once the principle is admitted, these anomalies can easily be adjusted. The few who have already received their penny will never grumble to see their long neglected comrades receive their due. We suppose it is hopeless to raise the claim of interest against the State; but we submit that when this long postponed obligation shall be met, much care should be taken to seek out the widows and children of officers who have died whilst creditors of the State. The president of the Bonus committee would doubtless attend to this labour of love and comradeship. It will be seen that we assume there is now fair probability that bonus claims will be paid sooner or later.

THE CAMP AT DELHI.

The site chosen for the Camp of Exercise is singularly well suited to display the fighting qualities of our soldiers, and equally ill-adapted to test the efficiency of the Military Departments in time of war. It forms a great triolateral outside the eastern gates of Delhi; each point of the triangle being about five miles distant from the other two, and each forming the head-quarters of a field force encamped as if on actual service. It is premature to speak of the operations of which the intervening space will form the theatre during the next few weeks. Military men have already favoured us with a great variety of views on the subject, but we learn on the best authority that these views are the conceptions which individual officers have formed as to what a Camp of Exercise should be, rather than the deliberate design of those who will be in command. Indeed, much of the instruction to be derived by the army from the camp, and much of the interest which the public will take in the manoeuvres, depend upon the leaders keeping their own counsel till the time for executing them arrives. We shall, therefore, abstain from any premature conjectures as to the plan of operations, and meanwhile try to give our readers a clear idea of the ground which they will occupy, and of the degree in which they will test the hardihood of our soldiers, the ingenuity of our officers, and the capability of the Military Departments to bear the strain of actual war.

And first of the ground itself. The city of Delhi, protected on the east by the Jumna, will have two great camps thrown out on its opposite or inland side, one of them about two miles from the walls on the north-west, and the other at the same distance to the south-west. The town wall and moat, which however are now broken through by the State Railway, strengthen the intervening space. The third camp occupies a strong position upon a water channel six miles due west of the city, but at a rather greater distance by any practicable means of military approach. Between the first and second, which lie respectively two miles from the walls on the north-west and south-west, and which for the sake of brevity we may call the protecting camps, lie five miles of broken ground, covered partly by gardens, partly by ruined clusters of huts, partly by the two native suburbs known as Paharigang and Paharipur, and finally towards the north by the civil station of Delhi. The latter consists, as usual, of European houses and compounds, with a most memorable graveyard, Nicholson's garden, and several converging roads. If an attack on the city forms part of the winter evolutions, this will be the base of the defence. To the north of the north-western camp the country is intersected with water-channels and canals, until a bend of the Jumna closes the possibilities of approach in that direction; and this would form the northern extremity of the defending base. Then follows the north-western camp itself; then the five miles of suburbs, gardens, and ruins already described; then the south-western camp; beyond which stretches to the southward a country covered with the remains of bygone Dehli, dotted with mosques, tombs, and ancient ruins, and broken up by mounds, hollows, precipices, and water-courses. The total length of the depending base thus indicated stretches in a straight line for about fifteen miles south-west from the bed of the Jumna at Wazirpur.

The third camp, which, for the sake of brevity, and without anticipating the actual campaign, may be termed the attacking one, is therefore faced by a strongly defended line running between it and the walls, and stretching far enough, both to the north and south of the city, to render flank movements very difficult. Between it and this line rise the rocky heights known in history as the Ridge; the Ridge, that is to say, where in the hot weeks from June to September 1856 our gallant soldiers shed their blood like water, and whence, on the 14th of the latter month, they issued, stern and fierce, to storm the walls. The heights run almost parallel with the line of defence mentioned above, at a distance of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the walls, and about three from the third or attacking camp. They throw out one or two little spurs to the westward, but in general they descend first abruptly and then by gently sloping plains westward towards a series of marshes, which here gather together into a well-defined river. Beyond this river, known as the Subi Naddi, and firmly posted on its western banks, is the third camp. An attacking force from it would therefore have first to cross the stream, which, however, it will perfectly command; then to find its way up the gently sloping plains where cavalry could act in a splendid manner; then to scale the heights in the face of light batteries; then to cross the broken ground on the east side of them; and finally to force a passage through the suburbs between the two protecting camps, before it reached the city walls. How a British force has done all this and more than all this on the very same ground we propose on another morning briefly to recount.—Englishman, Nov. 30.

STATION TALK.

RAWAL PINDI, Nov. 26.—Captain Wilson was buried at four o'clock last evening with military honours, and the funeral cortege was most imposing. First came the firing party of forty, in very open file, with arms reversed; then the band of H.M.'s 36th with muffled drums playing the "Dead March in Saul"; then the body on an Armstrong gun, drawn by six splendid horses. On the coffin were the helmet, sword, belts, and sabretache of the deceased officer; then his charger, fully caparisoned with the gold-embroidered saddle-cloth of the corps, sheepskin, shabraque, and reversed boots, led by white ribbons between two troopers, each having two or three good-conduct badges; then came (what I supposed) the chief mourners, among whom I noticed Colonel Bean, our worthy Cantonment Magistrate; then the Horse Artillerymen, then the Foot Artillerymen, then the officers of the station, amongst whom were very few red coats, strange to say. On nearing the cemetery, the firing party arranged themselves in two rows on each side of the road, en tableau, "resting on arms reversed." This is done by resting the muzzle of the gun on the left foot; the right palm rests on the butt, the left elbow on the back of the right hand, and the forehead rests on the left hand partially closed, as in the attitude of prayer. The coffin was then dismounted, the procession passed into the cemetery, three rounds, and all was over.—Indian Daily News Correspondent.

DELHI, Dec. 2.—In continuation of my letter of the 30th I now report further particulars regarding the outbreak of cholera here, which now I believe is well-nigh stamped out. In a corner of the suburb round the Sudder Bazaar, behind the old Eedgah (place of sacrifice), a colony of Chamars, who are said to be famine refugees from Marwar and other places round Bikaner, some time back squatted and practised their calling as tanners. Before the mutiny, tanneries were not permitted so close to the city; but the ground all about this colony has always been used as a public latrine, and this fact, added to the extensive tanning operations constantly carried on, and the want of proper or any conservancy owing to the locality being out of sight of the Municipal authorities, makes it a matter of no surprise that cholera should break out on this spot. Happily, the disease has been confined to this locality, and has not spread. On the 30th there were very few cases, and I have not [since] heard of any fatal ones. The authorities have worked very hard to suppress this outbreak, and have deported the Chamars to a distance, sending out tents for their accommodation. It has been determined to watch the progress of the cholera for four days, and if there is then no symptoms of its increasing, the military movements are to go on as already arranged; till then all regiments on the move for Delhi have been stopped by telegraph. If during these four days there be any signs of cholera spreading, the camp is not to be pitched. In the meantime stores are coming in and military officers abound.

THE CAMP OF EXERCISE, DELHI, Dec. 2.—Lord Napier of Magdala, Col. Thesiger, Adjutant General, and Col. Biddulph, Deputy Adjutant General, R.A., in India, arrived in camp on the 30th ultimo. Office establishments are open. The only troops here at present are the 6-13th Mountain battery, and four companies of the 109th Regiment. Cholera has appeared in the city (three miles away); forty-three deaths have occurred among the natives in a certain locality in the Sudder Bazaar; the disease is attributed to the use as food of bad meat. The troops marching towards Delhi are directed to halt for the present. The thermometer in tents is at 2 P.M. 75 degrees; outside in the early morning 50 degrees. Major-General Travers, who commands the 1st division, has arrived at Delhi, and Major-General Tombs is here also.

DELHI, Dec. 4.—No fresh cases of cholera are reported. Troops on a march will halt for the present. The 20th Hussars, who had proceeded four stages from Umballa, have been directed to return to that station for supplies. Head-quarters camp, and 6-13 and 109th are healthy. Staff officers are arriving daily. The days are unusually warm for the time of year, but the nights are getting bitter cold.

THE DELHI CAMP.—N. W. PROVINCES, Dec. 2.—Just a line to say that sowars have been sent out in all directions from the Commander-in-Chief's camp, near the old Delhi cantonments, ordering regiments on their way to the Camp of Exercise to pause and await further orders. This is on account of cholera, which has carried off some twenty persons at least in the city of Delhi. All who have been over to see the new camping ground say that the neighbourhood is most unsuitable for military evolutions, on account of the injury which must be done to horses. In some directions the whole surface is sprinkled with loose stones from the size of an apple to the size of a man's head. Of course in real war commanders must often fight on undesirable ground. But when the operations are merely for purposes of exercise and practice it seems absurd to make them unnecessarily dangerous and costly. There is a possibility that the whole affair may be transferred to Meerut should any new cases of cholera occur. Surgeon W. R. Steuart, 19th Brigade R.A., has been appointed to the charge of the field hospital, which is to be within the Fort of Delhi. Roberts's Horse has been stopped at Meerut till further orders. Scores of the hill coolies from Darjeeling for the Loshai expedition have died of cholera on board the river transports. The flats crowded with these poor creatures are said to have been quite insufficient for their accommodation, and the native doctors were of little or no use.

BENARES, Nov. 29.—The people of this city were most anxious as to the result of the appeal in our Kotwal's case. He was committed for torturing and ill-treating some boatmen, who were suspected of the theft of a box containing jewels and other valuables, in order to extort confessions from them of the crime. He has been sentenced by the Session Judge to two years' simple imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 200. The High Court has reduced the sentence to one year only. This case should serve as a warning to some other officers in these provinces. That they have recourse to harsh measures for the purpose of tracing crime is no novel circumstance to people here; but the crimes disclosed in this case were very cruel. Mr. Walter Morgan, the Chief Justice of the High Court of these Provinces, has left us to act in the same capacity at Madras, and has been succeeded by Sir Robert Stuart, who has just arrived from England. Sir Walter will always be remembered by suitors and others for his patient hearings and impartial decisions. His excellent qualities as a judge made him extremely popular in the North-Western Provinces.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

LUCKNOW.—We are deeply concerned to hear of the death yesterday morning of Mrs. Sache, the wife of our local photographer. The lady succumbed to a severe attack of cholera. Much sympathy is manifested with the bereaved husband and family.—Lucknow Times, Nov. 29.

THE PALATIAL BARRACKS.—In order to test the adaptability of the various barracks throughout India for the residence of European soldiers during the hot months, thermometrical observations have been ordered to be made at Peshawur, Jullunder, Morar, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Allahabad, Saugor, and Barrackpore, which are the principal stations, by medical officers nominated by the Inspector-General of Hospitals. These observations will be made at sunrise, at ten A.M. and four P.M.—Calcutta Daily Examiner, Nov. 30.

SICKNESS IN BAREILLY.—A correspondent writes to us under date Camp Hussunpore, the 18th inst., and reports much sickness in the Bareilly district. The Rev. Mr. Parker and wife (of the American Mission) are indefatigable in alleviating the suffering so prevalent, and have been themselves distributing medicine and food in every direction. There would appear to be much fever and ague in all the villages on the banks of the Bootya river, and many villages are entirely deserted, owing to the cholera and other diseases. The dead are said in many cases to be lying undisposed of, owing to the panic amongst the survivors.—Lucknow Times.

SUPPLY OF MILITARY BOOKS FOR THE ARMY.—The Adjutant-General of the Army has inquired of the Supreme Government if it is to be understood that his office is responsible for the notification to the Military Department of its wants in the matter of all books of regulations, and has suggested that the India Office booksellers might be instructed to send to him all such books, without special indents for them. The Government of India have, therefore, inquired of the Secretary of State, in a recent despatch, whether any special requisition from this country is necessary for books, such as the Mutiny Act, and other publications, which should be in the hands of the commanding officers.

COMMISSARIAT.—We are informed that Lieutenant-Colonel Dunbar, Deputy Assistant Commissary General, in charge of the Commissariat elephants at Cachar, has been relieved of his duties by Mr. Nuthal, and the gallant officer is shortly expected at the presidency en route to Benares to assume charge of the Executive Commissariat Department there, to which he has lately been appointed. We believe, however, there will be some delay in the return to the Presidency of Colonel Dunbar, as he has been directed to proceed to Dacca, and to report on the condition of a small number of elephants said to have been sick at that station, and consequently unfit for immediate service.—Indian Daily News.

MILITARY.—A correspondent of an up-country contemporary, writing from Lahore on Nov. 26, says:—"The 38th Regiment have just passed through on their way home to England after a long term of service in India, the latter portion of which has been most disastrous, as much sickness decimated the corps. H.M.'s 70th Regiment is now at Meean Meer en route to Rawul Pindee. This corps has just arrived from England, and has been very fortunate in being quartered at once on the pet station of the Punjab. The 31st N.I. also passed through last week en route for Mooltan, where they relieve the 45th Rattray's Sikhs. The 17th N.I. are expected next week at Meean Meer to take the place of the 35th N.I., who are ordered to Cawnpore."

HASTY LEGISLATION.—A better example of the folly of legislating at Simla could not be given than the official notification of the business to be brought forward at the Viceregal Council on Friday next. Act XXIX. of 1871, an Act to repeal certain Bengal laws and regulations, received the assent of the Viceroy on the 19th of October last. The first business to be brought forward when the Council re-assembles in Calcutta is an Act introduced by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to repeal part of the Act passed hardly a month ago, and to revise some of the regulations repealed by it. If the Council had had the benefit of local knowledge when the Act was introduced, says the Englishman, this unnecessary waste of time might have been avoided.—Times of India.

DEATH OF A LATE VIZIER OF OUDH.—We have to announce that the Nawab Ali Nuckee Khan, the last Prime Minister of the Oudh dynasty, who was on a visit to Lucknow, had died, it is supposed of cholera, in that city. He was, as is well known, extremely unpopular with the citizens of Lucknow. They entertained the opinion that it was to his maladministration that the annexation of the Province was due; and they actually attributed to the presence of the ex-Minister the great sickness which has prevailed in Lucknow for the past month. The Nawab, we believe, has left a considerable amount of property to his heirs. His widow and other relations are now in the city; they reached Lucknow from Calcutta only a day or two before the Nawab's death.—Pioneer, Dec. 5.

MORAR.—It is said that Dr. Muir has been directed to proceed to Morar to report on the state of the 11th Regiment, that corps having at the present time one hundred men in hospital, and two hundred others unfit for duty. It will probably be necessary to remove the regiment to a hill station. There must be luck or interest in these matters, says a Calcutta contemporary. Whilst the 55th Regiment, arrived in India subsequently to the 11th Foot, has enjoyed the climates of Hazaribagh and Chuckrata, the 11th has been allowed no such indulgence. Cut up by cholera and small-pox at Fyzabad, it was two years ago removed to Morar, a station notorious for its insalubrity. Better plan of improving a corps off the face of the country we cannot readily imagine.

BRITISH SUBJECTS IN CAPTIVITY.—A contemporary says "that one good result of the Loshai expedition will be the release of the British subjects held in captivity by the chiefs friendly to us. In all, these number, it is said, forty-eight." We believe that instead of forty-eight, there are at the lowest twenty times that number of British subjects held captive by the tribes. Many of these parties have, however, been so long among the tribes-people that they would probably decline to avail themselves of opportunity to return to their natal districts were such afforded them. Cachar was annexed to the British dominions in 1832. For years preceding its annexation it had been completely at the mercy, not only of Kookie raiders, but of the Maniporeans, and also of the tribes to its north. Since annexation raiding has continued, though not every year. In fact, were there not a single tea plantation in Cachar the present expedition is a step that ought to be taken for the protection of the native British subjects.—Calcutta Daily Examiner, Nov. 29.

LADAKH.—The following is an extract from the diary of the British Joint Commissioner at Ladakh:—"Oct. 2: Received a visit from Mahomed Bakee, the messenger from Yarkand. He reports that the war in which the Atalik Ghazi was engaged last year came to a close about four months after the return of Mr. Forsyth's party from Yarkand, viz., about the beginning of January. Four hundred rifles, bought and taken up by Mirza Shadi, arrived in time to be of great service at Urumchi. They were distributed to picked men in the various corps, who were, however, called together on occasion to form a body of riflemen. He adds that the Atalik came slowly back from Urumchi, staying a short time at each town to confirm his officials and to settle matters of administration. He has now been about six months at Aksa, whence he has sent home a small part of his force, retaining the rest about him. Several of the remaining Afghan and Turki merchants have started this week for Yarkand, after hearing the news brought by the messenger."

FATAL EXPLOSION AT AGRA.—We are sorry to report a serious accident in the Agra Fort yesterday afternoon. The chief laboratory was blown to pieces while the construction of cartridges was going on, and the loss of life has been heavy. The conductor in charge, one sergeant, and a youth were the Europeans killed. Of natives twenty-three lost their lives, and eleven now lie in hospital in a precarious state. The cause of the accident and the extent of the damage done are not yet known.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 30.—The sad catastrophe in the Agra Fort is the gloomy subject of conversation among all classes just now. Shortly after the explosion occurred as stated by us yesterday a court of inquiry assembled by order of the Brigadier-General to investigate and report upon the cause of the accident. It is hardly necessary to say that no light whatever has been thrown upon the matter, and it is not likely now that the cause will ever be known. The Brigadier and his staff were promptly on the spot. They first visited the poor suffering creatures rescued from the ruins and under treatment, but in the awful state they were nothing could be elicited from them. After receiving every attention possible from the garrison surgeon and apothecary, they were removed to the Civil Dispensary. Of the whole party of fourteen all but one died before the morning of yesterday, and that one, it is feared, will not survive. With him will die the only chance there was of the cause of the explosion being known. The laboratory was a low, long one-storied building. After the explosion only one of the end walls was left standing. A working party of her Majesty's 65th set to work without delay and brought out the bodies of the dead. All have not even yet been found. The body of Conductor Ware, fearfully mutilated, was found, but not that of his son, or of Sergeant Upton. Both these young soldiers were steady, respectable men of good character, and both, sad to say, leave widows and families. They have the sympathies of the community. At the time of the explosion there were in the building Conductor Ware, Sergeant Upton, Conductor Ware's child, and thirty-six natives. The natives were engaged in the manufacture of blank cartridges for the Delhi Camp of Exercise. The little boy who perished had only just gone up with a message from home to his father,—Id., Dec. 1.

CHOLERA AT LUCKNOW.—We are sorry to learn that the visitation of cholera at Lucknow during the last twenty days has been more general and severe than we imagined from the mere bazaar reports. It has, however, confined itself chiefly to the civil lines, fort and city. Our civil surgeon, Dr. Cannou, who has only lately arrived from England, has not returned to a bed of roses, his carriage is to be seen flying about night and day, and his house is besieged by applicants of all classes for antidotes and cures; we only hope his health and strength may carry him through these trying times, and we are glad to hear he is not left unaided in his onerous duties, but has received the voluntary and able support of Dr. Whishaw, the Inspector-General of Prisons, and also has the services of Dr. Grant, of the 7th Native Infantry, placed at his disposal as an assistant so long as the sickness continues. It has been considered prudent to break up both the Martiniere boys' and girls' schools. The former has been fortunate in having no cases, but out of four attacked at the girls' school, one teacher and one pupil have died. The cases amongst the European and East Indian residents of the civil lines have been very numerous, in fact, we have lost several much-respected members of that community since the commencement of the month, no fewer than sixteen or seventeen having been taken ill, of whom nearly one-third died. Of the military, her Majesty's 17th Regiment alone have suffered, especially the company on duty in the Muehee Bhawun Fort, which has since been sent into camp. The epidemic is decidedly on the decrease since the 21st, and the type of the disease of a much less deadly character. It appears since that date to have entirely left the Christian community, and is exhausting its virulence on the domestic servants and native population. Temporary hospitals and depots for cholera medicines have been opened in the different sub-divisions of the city, and at the several police posts by order of the civil surgeon, and wards in the general hospital and dispensaries have been prepared to receive the sick. The number of convalescents in these institutions increases. Muehee Bhawun Fort is the locality to which cholera appears to attach itself with the greatest pertinacity. We trust the strong west wind now blowing will soon rid us of our deadly enemy. —Lucknow Times, Nov. 29.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 6.—The expected improvement has not set in; on the contrary, the market appears to be in a worse position, and the business transacted since last mail has been very trifling. Of Grey Shirtings, sales of 8½ lbs. have transpired at Rs. 5-8—a rate which was in very few instances accepted before last mail, and for the other weights equally low prices are obtainable. Bleached Goods generally remain very quiet. Mule Twist: 40's have changed hands, to a moderate extent only, at rather lower rates. Coloured Twist continues depressed.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 6.—Jute: The demand for fine descriptions continues good and prices firm, but for inferior descriptions sellers are disposed to accept lower rates. Saltpetre: The market has been very dull; lower prices will have to be accepted before business can be done. Rice: Not much doing, as both buyers and sellers are waiting for reports on the present harvest, which, however, is generally expected to be an abundant one. Linseed: The business transacted has been very limited, but prices rule the same as at last quotations. Corals: There being no local demand, holders have shipped about 5,000 pieces to Europe on their own account, and prices continue firm.

MONEY AND SHARE MARKETS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 6.—EXCHANGES: Money is somewhat tight in the bazaar. Government paper is dull and difficult of sale. Exchange has kept firm at 2 1-16d. for Bank Bills, with a small demand. First Class Creditentials at 2½d., and Documentary Bills at 2 3-16d. to ¼d.

ACCIDENT AT THE PAGODA.—The Rangoon Mail reports the following:—"Another accident is reported at the Pagoda. An old woman who had made a vow to walk round seven times fell down and died before the task was completed. A subscription was immediately made for her funeral, and over Rs. 1,000 was collected on the spot. Two births are reported as having taken place on the platform during the week, one of a boy and one of a girl. The mothers are looked upon as most fortunate people, and the old lady who died is, we doubt not, envied by many her death in the performance of a good deed having insured her happiness in a future existence."

A TABLET FOR MAJOR WILLIAMS.—We are glad to state that a subscription has been set on foot to put up for Major Williams a tablet in St. John's Church similar to Mr. McDonnell's tablet at the back of the reading desk. We have also to state that, at a meeting of the Municipal Commissioners convened by Mr. Sykes Wright, the other day, the sum of Rs. 100 from the funds was unanimously voted towards this object; and moreover we learn with much pleasure that, besides this sum, three native Commissioners have spontaneously contributed out of their own pockets the sum of another hundred rupees towards the same object. This is a striking proof of the esteem in which the deceased officer was held. —Madras Standard, Nov. 29.

SIR MADHAVA RAO.—We are glad to learn that the Maharajah of Travancore is not likely to lose the valuable services of the able Oriental statesman, Sir Madhava Rao. A contemporary states that there is no foundation for the report regarding his resignation, and that even if he wished to resign his resignation would not be accepted.—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 5.

A RHINOCEROS CAUGHT.—We learn from Akyab that a rhinoceros about the size of a small buffalo was some days ago caught in the Akyab district. When pursued by the villagers it made an attempt at escape by crossing a river close by. Some of the boats by means of which the villagers tried to catch it were overthrown by the animal, but it was at last overpowered and caught, and is kept there still well secured.—Rangoon Mail.

THE CENSUS OF MADRAS.—The census of the city of Madras, taken in 1863, gave a total population of 427,771. Considerable hesitation has been always shown by the municipal authorities in placing reliance on this enumeration, and we are not surprised to hear that the census that has just been taken gives a total of barely 400,000 persons. The prosperity of the town has certainly not decreased since 1863, and it seems highly probable that the census of that year was not accurate. The census of 1871, on the other hand, will, we believe, be as accurate as it is possible for human ingenuity, patience, and close scrutiny to make it.—Madras Mail, Dec. 5.

THE ECLIPSE PARTY.—The Eclipse Party have arrived in Ootacamund. Col. Tennant, R.E., is now residing at Syk's Hotel. Instructions have been received by the Commissioner to afford the party every necessary assistance, and funds to the extent of Rs. 5,000 have been placed in the Ootacamund Treasury at the disposal of the officer in charge. Arrangements are being made for placing the instruments and apparatus on the summit of Dodabetta, and we believe it is intended that all the party shall encamp and sleep on Dodabetta on the night of the 11th. We hear of numerous private parties being made up to occupy tents and the rooms of Snowden House, adjoining Dodabetta, on that night. M. Jansen, an eminent French astronomer, is also here, who will observe the eclipse on behalf of the philosophical institutions of his own country.—South of India Observer.

THE OVERLAND ROUTE.—A correspondent of the Ceylon Observer writes:—"The present generation of Indians can but faintly realise the advantages of intercourse and the facilities for change placed within their reach. When I reached Ceylon in 1837, who could have dreamed of Suez Canal steamers capable of reaching Galle from London in one month and carrying first-class passengers for £40 each, including everything except wines, which certainly ought not to cost £5 additional? The P. and O. charges are higher, but apart from complete organisation for comfort and safety, there is, as far as human agency can effect such a result, absolute certainty as to time. On landing, or previously, I hope to learn that the decision of the Engineer and the Colonial, Indian, and Imperial Governments is in favour of a steamer canal between India and Ceylon, and that Colombo is to have a harbour and docks. Even the 'utmost Indian Isle' must not be left behind in the world's march of progress."

THE RANGOON RIVER.—We would call the attention of the local Government to the importance of having an accurate re-survey of the Rangoon river made without delay. The shipping season is coming on, and the pilots to a man say that the channel has altered, and that one of their number when taking down the steamer Tenasserim touched the ground and nearly turned over when in the channel, owing to a new bank having formed near the wreck of the Beau Ideal. The Master Attendant, Captain Arnot, and his deputy, Captain Mack, visited the spot, and we believe say that the pilot was not in the channel. The pilots all say that the Tenasserim's pilot was in the regular channel, and if these gentlemen are correct, and if no steps are taken by Government to clear away the present obstruction, we may calculate with a great degree of certainty on having some more casualties in the Rangoon river this shipping season, and on having insurance offices at home refuse the Rangoon risk, unless at very increased rates of premium.—Rangoon Times.

THE DAGOON PAGODA AT RANGOON.—The total height of the pagoda and htee is shown at 240 cubits and six inches, equivalent to about 375 English feet. This, we believe, is slightly in excess of the height of St. Paul's Cathedral as measured from the basement, and will serve to show what labour and skill the Burmese have employed in the erection of the present scaffolding during so short a time. We doubt whether English workmen would have reached the cross of St. Paul's in the same period; and it must be remembered that in their case there would have been many foundations and starting places for the various tiers. The Burmese have had only one, and have successfully carried the bamboo network to the very top. We believe that there is a general wish among the Burmese that the old htee should remain in Rangoon, and a number of them are willing to come forward with subscriptions to build a new pagoda here for its reception. We are told that by order of the Assistant Commissioner, Mung On, the upper part was broken off and brought down on Tuesday in a coolie's basket, and that this has caused general dissatisfaction among the Burmese who wished their old ornament to descend unhurt.—Rangoon Gazette, Nov. 17.

TROOPS FOR ENGLAND.—H.M.'s 38th Regiment—(strength 22 officers, 2 ladies, 8 children, 600 men, 40 women, and 80 children)—with a detail of time expired men from Deolalee depot—(strength about 11 officers, 1 lady, 2 children, 166 men, 20 women and 30 children)—arrived here from Deolalee by special train on Thursday and were embarked for England on board H.M.'s troopship Euphrates. She left Bombay on the 8th December.

MAJOR SLADEN.—Major Sladen will not return to his appointment at Mandalay, but will probably be offered a deputy commissionership of the second class in British Burmah. It is not to be inferred from this that the Government has disapproved of Major Sladen's proceedings as Political Agent, or that any censure or reflection is intended. The determination has been come to, we believe, entirely in deference to the opinions of the King, who has, it seems, expressed a wish that Major Sladen should not return. We are not quite sure that such a step is a wise one; the Government is surely the proper judge of the officer best fitted to occupy any post of responsibility, and unless the King could adduce sufficiently potent reasons for the non-return of his Political Agent, it seems somewhat undignified to remove him for a mere whim. But since the Government has thought proper to take this step, it is, we think, only just to Major Sladen that his removal should not even appear to be a punishment or degradation. A second class deputy Commissionership seems hardly a suitable recognition of five years' service in a political appointment, the holder of which has admittedly filled it with credit.—Englishman.—We hear that Major Sladen is coming down by next mail, and that he is to be placed in charge of the Rangoon district. But we cannot believe that this appointment will be permanent as Major Sladen's value to the Government lies in quite another direction; and it can be hardly likely that we should regard with any seriousness the vapid threats which the King of Burmah has uttered against him.—Rangoon Gazette.

BEYOND THE SIND FRONTIER.—We gather the following from the Upper Sind Frontier intelligence that reached Kurrachee on the 20th ultimo:—The rebels, to keep themselves well informed of affairs at Khelat, stop the kossids plying between Khelat and Jacobabad. They take possession of the contents of the letters addressed to the Khan's Vakeel, and allow them to go on to Jacobabad with covers addressed to the Sircar. The Khan has sent a force of some five hundred men and two guns to punish the rebels. The latter are vigorously preparing themselves, and, in order that they may be the better able to meet their opponents, have called on Sirdar Moola Mahomed Khan to join them. They have also asked the Khan's troops at Lahree, under Sorab Khan, to give up their arms and accoutrements, or stand pillage. The parties have arranged things diplomatically and promised neutrality. The rebels intend concentrating at Mitree, where Moola Mahomed was to have met them on the 24th ultimo.—Sindian, Dec. 2.

THE BHYADS OF KATTYWAR, who are generally represented to be a patient and long-suffering race, ground down and groaning under the iron rule of their Thakores, are not, it would seem, quite destitute of spirit upon occasion. On the 21st of last month, Gopalrao Mahadeo, the Surveyor under the "Seymada Committee" of Kattywar, went out to survey some disputed boundary, and summoned Jamulsung, one of the disputants (a Bhyad of Palitana, but at present in opposition to that Durbar), to attend him at the spot, accompanied with only two bigarees. Jamulsung, it appears, detested the Kharbaree of Palitana, and, knowing that that official would be present at the survey, determined to make a bold stroke for his removal. So Jamulsung attended as he was bidden; but, instead of coming forward in a peaceful guise, he rode up to the astonished Gopalrao, at the head of fifty sowars and twenty-five footmen, all fully armed, and threatened vengeance upon his head if the obnoxious Kharbaree was not expelled from office forthwith. This was a gentle mode of persuasion which Gopalrao could not resist, and, after making the required promise, he retired in hot haste, leaving the survey to take care of itself, with Jamulsung master of the field. We are curious to know whether the Kharbaree has been reinstated, and what measures the Political Agent took to punish the impetuous Bhyad.—Times of India, Dec. 9.

MILITARY.—The 49th Regiment (consisting of 19 officers, 530 men, 77 women, and 162 children) will shortly move from Poona en route to Khundwa in wings. A detachment of the 60th Foot (consisting of 2 officers, 121 men, 2 women, and 5 children) under orders for Asseerghur, will accompany the first wing of the 19th Regiment, and be detached at Chandnee, whence they will march on to Asseerghur in relief of the detachment of the 49th Regiment now stationed there, which will join the first wing of their regiment at Chandnee and proceed together to Khundwa by the same special train. H.M.'s troopship Junna is expected to arrive in Bombay harbour on the 29th Dec., via the Suez Canal, with regimental details, which will be distributed as follows:—To Deolalee for Bengal: 5th Brigade Royal Artillery—31 men, 1 woman, and 2 children; 13th Brigade Royal Artillery—5 men; 23rd and F 23rd Brigade Royal Artillery—45 men, and 1 woman; 1st Battalion 3rd Foot—2 officers, 1 lady, 40 men, 1 woman, and 3 children; 1st Battalion 8th Foot—2 officers, 81 men, 3 women, and 4 children; 1st Battalion 11th Foot—1 officer, and 96 men; 2nd Battalion 12th Foot—4 officers, 2 ladies, 2 children, 111 men, 2 women, and 5 children; 2nd Battalion 25th Foot—1 officer, 21 men, 6 women, and 5 children; 106th Foot—1 officer, 56 men, 8 women, and 8 children; 109th Foot—2 officers, and 45 men; 1-17th Foot—1 lady. IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, Dec. 9.—A much larger business has been done this week, particularly in Shirts, than we have had to report for some months back, but prices show little or no change. Yarns continue very steady at previous prices, and a moderate business has been done. Metals: A further advance has taken place in Copper, and stocks are reported to be very small.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, Dec. 9.—Cotton: The business done has again been very small. Except New Cotton, for forward delivery, which may be quoted Rs. 3 to 5 per candy higher, prices show little or no change. The purchases for export aggregate 2,700 candies. The market closes firm.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, Dec. 9.—EXCHANGE: A limited business has been done—much smaller than in the previous week; but rates, principally influenced by the firmness of exchange in Calcutta, have throughout been very steady. The rate on China for 60 days' sight House Bills is Rs. 21 1/4 for 100 dollars.

6th Charge.—For conduct unbecoming the character and position of an executive commissariat officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Peshawur, between the months of July and September, 1869, inclusive, knowingly ordered false returns to be made for the months of July and August, 1869, showing that the mules under his charge were receiving gram, when in fact, and to his knowledge, they were receiving barley.

7th Charge.—For neglect of duty, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Peshawur, while executive commissariat officer between the months of December, 1868, and December, 1869, inclusive, not exercised proper supervision over the receipt and expenditure of khush and bamboos for making tattie, whereby the contractors were enabled to defraud the Government of about Rs. 6,566.

8th Charge.—For neglect of duty, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Peshawur, while executive commissariat officer, on or about the 9th December, 1868, sent Hera Lall Chatterjee, an office writer, and cash for advances to Nowshera, to equip the 77th regiment, and given blank Itlanamahs to the said Hera Lall Chatterjee, signed by himself, Lieutenant-colonel Lowe, Mr. Matthew Couper, conductor of the commissariat department, being at the time in charge at Nowshera, and being a proper and competent officer to perform the duty.

9th Charge.—For neglect of duty, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Peshawur, while executive commissariat officer, on or about the 17th December, 1868, himself signed and submitted, for Brigadier-general Stewart's signature, a certificate for demurrage of camels, no such demurrage being in fact due or payable.

10th Charge.—For neglect of duty, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Peshawur, while executive commissariat officer, on or about the 1st August, 1868, passed a bill for Rs. 1,555-2-10 to Heera Lall Chatterjee, for arrears of bearers' batta twelve months after it was due, without the sanction of the commissary general; and in not exercising due supervision, and ascertaining that the said sum of Rs. 1,555-2-10 was duly disbursed by the said Heera Lall Chatterjee; and also in not taking proper precautions to prevent loss to Government by payment of sums which might have lapsed by death or desertion between the time when the first batta was earned and the time the money was paid to Heera Lall Chatterjee.

11th Charge.—For neglect of duty, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Peshawur, while executive commissariat officer, on or about the 19th April, 1869, improperly received from the Peshawur civil treasury a sum of Rs. 600, without duly ascertaining to whom the money was due, and improperly allowing the money to be received by Heera Lall Chatterjee.

Finding:

The Court finds that Lieut. J. R. A. S. Lowe, of the Bengal staff corps, assistant commissary general, is, of the First charge, not guilty.

Second charge, not guilty.

Third charge, not guilty.

Fourth charge, guilty of so much of the charge as alleges that he ordered the destruction of the office surplus fund account book. Of the rest of the charge not guilty.

Fifth charge guilty, with the exception of so much of the charge as refers to the month of June, 1869.

Sixth charge, guilty.

Seventh charge, guilty; but the Court finds that, instead of the contractors having been enabled to defraud Government of the sum of Rs. (6,566) six thousand five hundred and sixty-six, the sum of which Government was defrauded was Rs. (5,974) five thousand nine hundred and seventy-four.

Eighth charge, guilty of having sent Heera Lall Chatterjee with blank Itlanamahs, signed by Lieut. col. J. R. A. S. Lowe. Not guilty of the rest of the charges.

Ninth charge, guilty.

Tenth charge, not guilty.

Eleventh charge, guilty of improperly allowing the money to be received by Heera Lall Chatterjee. Not guilty of the rest of the charge.

Sentence.—The Court sentences the prisoner to be cashiered.

C. G. ARBUTHNOT, Col. R.H.A., President.

Murree, Oct. 26.

Approved and Confirmed.

The Court-martial has found Lieut. col. Lowe guilty of seven out of the eleven charges brought against him, but have recommended him to mercy on the ground of his previous good services and the high testimonials in his favour borne by the officers under whom he has served.

Of the seven charges of which Lieut. col. Lowe has been found guilty, four may come under the head of neglect of duty, or omission to protect the interests of the State; and if these offences, very serious as they are, had been all that Lieut. col. Lowe had been guilty of, I would have accepted the recommendation of the Court to mitigate the sentence which they might have pronounced against him.

But the remaining charges are of a still graver nature, and deeply affect the well-being of the public service.

Lieut. col. Lowe has been found guilty of ordering the destruction of an account of the disbursements from a fund which, under whatever form described, was in reality public money, and the creation of which was strictly prohibited. Also of submitting false returns of the feeding of the public cattle for a series of months.

Although the pressure of overwhelming duties, or of ill-health, might be found to palliate offences of neglect or omission, it could afford no excuse for those graver offences of which Lieut. col. Lowe has been found guilty.

Such acts opened the door to unlimited fraud and serious injury to the efficiency of the troops dependent on the cattle for food and transport.

If the Government cannot depend on the fidelity of the reports made on such vital points by officers placed in such high situations of trust and responsibility as that held by Lieut. col. Lowe, there must be an end of all proper administration.

It is with deep regret that I find myself unable to yield to the recommendation of the Court to mercy.

Lieut. col. Keer has performed a most painful duty, actuated, I believe, solely by conscientious motives, and merits the approval of the Government.

SIND, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders in this company was held on Dec. 22, at the London Tavern, under the presidency of Mr. W. P. Andrew. The report of the directors, which we have already published, was taken as read.

The Chairman said on every previous occasion of meetings the board had been able to make some pleasant communication. The present occasion was an exception to the general rule, for they had to deplore a sad accident to the line, occasioned by the most severe flood which had visited the Punjab for the last twenty-seven years. The admirable and effective manner in which the breaches had been repaired had elicited the approval of the consulting engineer of the Government of India. He desired also to express the thanks of the company to the native princes through whose territory the line ran for the timely and welcome aid and assistance they had afforded. Unfortunately they had before had occasion to deplore the loss of many colleagues on the direction, of many an eminent servant who had died at his post, but never did they sustain a more severe loss than in the demise of their late agent in Sind, Captain John Wood. He paid a high compliment to the abilities of the deceased gentleman, observing that the meeting would pardon his travelling a little out of the ordinary track to pay a tribute to the memory of one of the ablest and best servants the company ever had. Returning to the more immediate object of the meeting, he congratulated them upon the general position of the company. True, there had been a falling off in the traffic, which arose from the general depression in trade and commerce. But what was most gratifying was that the passenger traffic had augmented, if not in numbers, in that which was most important to a railway of this kind, viz., an increase in the receipts from the greater length of the journeys. This showed that the population were beginning to appreciate the advantages of the line, and to travel further from home than they had hitherto done. There were two things necessary to complete the success of the line—the harbour at Kurrachee and the construction of the missing link. In respect to the first, the works were going on, and a breakwater was in course of construction. The harbour had been immensely improved already. About 250 feet of the breakwater had already been built in the most simple, but at the same time most ingenious manner. Blocks of a conglomerate found on the spot were dropped into the sea so as to fit one into the other. About 1,500 feet of breakwater would have to be constructed before the works were completed. As regarded the missing link, the company had suggested it, and surveyed the country; and had the authority been given the company would have constructed it five years ago. As it was, the Government was still considering it, and writing endless reports and despatches about it, and consulting about the break of gauge. If the break of gauge was to come about, the longer the Government considered the matter the better, for he earnestly hoped the Government would never do anything so foolish as to take the question out of the world of consideration. (Hear, hear.) There was no disguising the fact that until this missing link was constructed the company could never attain the degree of prosperity it ought. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report and accounts.

Sir Donald McLeod, in seconding the motion, endorsed the remarks of the Chairman, observing that a very long residence in India had enabled him to bear testimony as to the exceptional severity of the recent flood, and to the efficiency of the company's officers, also to the great services rendered by the two native princes. The damage done was considerable, not only to the railway, but also in the adjacent country. It was no matter of surprise that this unprecedented flood should have caused so much damage, especially to the Beas bridge. It was not likely that so severe a flood would ever occur again, but in restoring the bridge the engineers had determined upon increasing it by ten spans, thus largely increasing the waterway, which, under ordinary circumstances, would have been sufficient. From his intimate knowledge of the vast resources of the Punjab he could assure them there was no reason for despondency in the temporary diminution of the traffic, as the matter would doubtless soon right itself, and future years show a large increase as the trade became more largely developed.

The Chairman, in reply, said that the expenses of the line had been reduced to the lowest point compatible with efficient working. The traffic had diminished on nearly all the Indian lines, and as the same rolling-stock, &c., had to be kept up, of course the expenditure looked larger in comparison. But the board could not leave off running certain trains simply because there were not quite so many passengers and merchandise to carry. (Hear, hear.)

The report and accounts were adopted.

Mr. Carpenter moved, and Mr. John King seconded, a special vote of thanks to the officers and staff of the company in India for their efficient services and their exertions in repairing the damage done to the line, which was unanimously agreed to.

A unanimous vote of thanks was accorded to the Chairman and his colleagues, and the proceedings terminated.

Miscellaneous.

INDIAN GENERAL OFFICERS.—We believe that the Indian general officers brought on to the British Establishment will continue to be paid by the India Office.

MILITARY.—Two Royal Warrants, the one dealing with the question of the pay of subaltern officers in the army, and the other with appointments and promotions in the household troops, have received her Majesty's signature this week, but have not yet been published. It is even doubtful whether they will appear in the January "Army List."—Broad Arrow.

WILL OF GENERAL JAMESON.—The will of Major-General Sir George Inglis Jameson, K.C.S.I., Bengal Army, and auditor of the accounts of the Secretary of State for India, who died at Vanbrugh Park, Kent, on Oct. 24 last, was proved in London on the 4th ult. by Lady Jameson, his relict, the sole executrix, to whom he has bequeathed his property, wheresoever situate, the personalty in this country being sworn under £3,000.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S ORATORY.—Though his conduct as a statesman was sometimes open to criticism, and though he neither sought nor attained the highest political rank, Lord Ellenborough was the greatest orator in the House of Lords, and, with the single exception of Mr. Bright, he was the greatest orator of his time. Lord Derby was a brilliant debater and a forcible declaimer, unsurpassed in readiness, in playfulness, and in felicity of personal attack; but he was indolent; he was almost always imperfectly informed, and he never succeeded in assuming a tone of high moral elevation. Lord Lyndhurst, who was in the highest degree clear, incisive, and logical, never attempted to soar into the higher regions of oratory. Mr. Gladstone is full of knowledge and copious in elocution, and he is transparently penetrated and oppressed by an overwhelming conviction of the truth and paramount importance of the doctrine which he may happen at the moment to believe and propound; but his speeches are deficient in proportion and finish, nor is he apt to utter the pregnant aphorisms and epigrams which fasten on the memory. Lord Ellenborough had every advantage of person, manner, and voice, and he never spoke without preparation. Standing during the greater part of his life apart from the immediate conflict of parties, he confined himself to subjects which he understood and in which he had a genuine interest. His style was pure, and at the same time lofty and dignified, recalling perhaps better than that of any contemporary orator the stately manner of Pitt, whom he must have heard in his boyhood. On his rare appearances as a speaker in the House of Lords, when he followed Lord Derby and other principal debaters, his eloquence seemed to transpose the discussion into a different key. If he had a defect as an orator, it was that his speeches, less persuasive than imposing, tended to excite admiration rather than assent.—Saturday Review.

THE ROYAL WARRANT OF 27TH DECEMBER, 1870.—It will be perceived that these clauses lay down that when all the colonels of the Indian Staff Corps who had attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel before the 18th February, 1861 (the date of the formation of the Staff Corps), should have been promoted to the rank of major-general on the Indian list, and a vacancy should happen on that list to which a colonel of the Staff Corps, who had not attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel before the said date, would have succeeded under the Indian regulations, an addition of one should be made to the British establishment of general officers by the promotion of the senior qualified colonel of the amalgamated list. The vacancy in question has occurred through the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir George Inglis Jameson, K.C.S.I., and Colonel J. A. Street has been promoted instead of Colonel Salmon, of the Bombay Staff Corps, the first of the lieutenant-colonels of 18th February, 1861. Furthermore, by the operation of the warrant, the general officers of the Staff Corps, consisting of forty-four major-generals and four lieutenant-generals, have been added to the British Establishment, and all the officers of the Staff Corps have been transferred to the general seniority list of the British Army. It is to be noticed that the proportion of general officers to combatant officers will still be maintained as one to twenty-eight, so that the promotion of Staff Corps officers though slow will be sure. The seniors among them are the present sufferers by the arrangement, as they find a whole host of Queen's officers before them. On the other hand, those officers of the Indian army who were not transferred to the staff corps will rise to the rank of Major-General in the Indian Establishment. The promotion of the batch of major-generals and lieutenant-generals in the Gazette of yesterday week was occasioned by the necessity which arose on the transfer of the Indian Staff Corps generals to the British Establishment to adjust the numbers in each grade, inter se, on that establishment. It will be perceived that the 6th of March, 1868, has been fixed upon as the antedate of the commissions as major-general to which the colonels of the British army are succeeding. This date has been chosen because it was then that the Indian artillery generals were transferred to a separate list, thus opening promotion to ten comparatively young Indian colonels, who accordingly superseded their British confreres.—Broad Arrow.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS FROM INDIA.—(PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 26.)—The Crocodile, one of the Indian troopships, Captain G. H. Parkin, arrived here this morning, with the 19th Regiment of Foot and a few time-expired men and military invalids. She left Bombay on the 25th November, and, having passed through the Suez Canal, has thus performed the voyage from India in thirty-one days. The 19th Regiment is to occupy the new barracks at Gosport, the recent quarters of the 95th Regiment, which is now stationed at the advanced forts on Portsdown-hill, with its headquarters at Fort Rowner.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The following is the report of the directors, to be submitted to a general meeting on January 4:—"The engineering staff has been reduced to the numbers required for maintaining the line and the supervision of some small works of completion. The working expenses for the half-year, after providing for £19,040 allowed to the Government on the final adjustment of certain outstanding claims for postal services, had been 40·80 per cent. of the receipts, against 39·78 per cent. in the corresponding half of 1870. The cost per train-mile had been 4s., against 3s. 5d. in the corresponding half-year; the apparent increase in the cost arose from reduction in the train mileage. The total number of passengers carried during the half-year ending the 30th of June last was 2,890,657, of which 9,452,236 were third-class, 347,347 intermediate class, 73,811 second-class, and 17,463 first-class. The tonnage in goods and minerals for the half-year was 580,378 tons, against 700,804 tons in the corresponding half-year, so that there had been a falling off of 120,426 tons, chiefly in consequence of the stagnation of trade. The principal decreases had occurred in grain and pulse carried over 300, 600, and 900 miles respectively, about 49,800 tons; in coal, about 23,600 tons; in seeds, about 61,000 tons; in salt, 10,500 tons; and in railway materials, about 10,000 tons; while there has been an increase in grain and pulse carried under 300 miles of about 14,200 tons; in cotton of about 16,200 tons, and in hides, iron, piece-goods, sugar, and wines, of about 12,600 tons. The Government of India had appointed a committee to inquire into the subject. In 1870 an exceptionally large supply of grain was forwarded over almost the entire line in consequence of the famine prevailing in the North-West Provinces of India. The gross earnings for the half-year ending the 30th of June last had been £1,256,198, against £1,431,056 in the corresponding half of 1870, and the net earnings (after providing for £19,040 already referred to) were £732,334, as compared with £865,874 in the corresponding half of 1870. The net earnings per train mile had been 5s. 9½d., against 5s. 2d. in 1870. While the difference in the gross receipts between the two periods amounted to £181,868, the difference between the net earnings of the two half-years was reduced to £133,540, which pointed to the great and creditable economy with which the traffic had been worked. This had been brought about chiefly by the large reduction in the train mileage. A perfectly satisfactory settlement between the Government and the company had been arrived at resulting in a balance of £29,824 for division between the two bodies. The company's moiety, £14,912, and of the surplus profits for the half-year, £39,715, making in all, with profit on exchange, £57,700, enabled the board to recommend the payment of a dividend, in addition to the guaranteed interest, of 4s. 4d. per cent., leaving a balance of £800 to be carried forward. The working expenses of the Jubbulpore line, after providing £6,495 allowed to the Government on the final adjustment of certain outstanding claims for postal services, has been 72·31 per cent. of the receipts, against 87·64 per cent. in the corresponding half-year. The cost per train mile had been 4s. 2½d., against 4s. 11½d. in the corresponding half-year. The total number of passengers carried in the half-year was 119,899, of which 113,506 were third-class. The gross earnings for the half-year ended the 30th of June last on the Jubbulpore line had been £76,931, against £69,464 in the corresponding half of 1870, and the net earnings £19,501, as compared with £8,583 in the same half of 1870. The net earnings per train mile had been 1s. 7½d., against 8½d. in 1870. There had, therefore, been both an increase in the receipts and a decrease in the working expenses during the half-year."

GOLD IN ASSAM.—An El Dorado like those of California, Victoria, and New South Wales is a great want of this country. The discovery of gold in quantities in Assam would conquer the soil and forests of that still almost primitive province about as quickly as the Government of India would be able to satisfy the administrative requirements of the new state of things it would create. And that there is gold in those quarters is fairly assumable. The mountains enclosing Assam are but the central vertebrae of that great world-spine of rock whose commencement is the Ural chain, and whose termination is found in the small ridges of Australia. Captain J. H. W. Osborne, Superintendent 2nd Division Revenue Survey, Lower Provinces, in his description of the country surveyed in district Luckimpore in season 1869-70, says:—"Gold exists in the sand of nearly all the Assamese rivers in very minute particles, but those rivers which flow from the mountains to the north contain, I believe, the largest quantity of this valuable metal. Gold-washing used to be extensively carried on in former years, and, if reports are to be believed, the right to wash for gold was farmed out by the old Kings for Rs. 27,000 annually, but this branch of industry has, I think, nearly died out, which may perhaps be attributed to the great increase in the wages of labourers since the introduction of tea."—Calcutta Examiner.

THE HISTORY

OF THE

BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE

APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE

TO THE

POLITICAL EXTINCTION OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

BY

LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1814 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1858.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. . . .

And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. . . . The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. . . .

We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. . . . The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. . . . The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume. . . . It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unincumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshah . . . is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

THE OPTOSCOPE.

The practical utility of the OPTOSCOPE is now fully determined. In numerous cases has its merits been displayed in a manner so satisfactory, that in no instance has it afforded less satisfaction to the intelligent inquirer than to the inventor himself. It has long been a matter of considerable importance to those suffering from defective vision to learn the exact state of the refractive humours of the eye, and the proper convexity or concavity of the glasses required to render the vision as perfect as the state of the organs will admit of.

Mr. BEAUMONT'S OPTOSCOPE is all that can be desired for this purpose, and those desirous of benefiting by his discovery may be suited with the most perfect-fitting glasses at moderate cost.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Dec. 16; Agra and Madras, Dec. 14; Calcutta, Dec. 13.

THE telegrams announcing the Prince of Wales's perilous illness appear to have awakened the liveliest sympathy among all classes of her Majesty's Indian lieges. Before the worst news came, Lord Mayo had already held his levée; but the Drawing-room was countermanded, and the opera-house closed. Throughout the country prayers for the Prince were publicly offered up, not only in Christian churches, but in temples thronged by Parsees, Hindoos, Mohammedans, and Jews. The impression everywhere produced upon the natives appears to have struck our countrymen with a pleased surprise. In Bombay and Calcutta fresh telegrams, received every few hours, served to fire or feed the public anxiety. Before the mail left the tone of the telegrams had become more cheerful and hope was reviving in every heart.

THE suspended preparations for the Camp of Exercise had been renewed, the proper authorities having agreed that no further spread of cholera was to be feared. The disease appears to have been confined to the lowest quarter of the city, but while it lasted to have been very severe; a hundred and thirty cases having been reported in two days. The manoeuvres were to begin at once, but matters were so arranged that, in the event of cholera reappearing, the camp could be broken up without delay. Lord Mayo himself was expected there in January. It has been decided, properly enough under the circumstances, to find only sufficient carriage for one division out of the three. More than that would have entailed heavy expense for no commensurate gain. Sufficient for the purpose has been brought together from the various stations where it is usually kept as a nucleus for the larger quantity required in war.

THE first meeting of the Legislative Council, after its return from Simlah, came off on the 1st December. Mr. F. Stephen announced the virtual settlement of the long strife between the two bodies of Brahmins, regarding the Brahmo Marriage Bill. Mr. Cockerell's Bill for amending and consolidating the law of Christian marriages was referred to a Select Committee, which will report on it two months later. Mr. Stephen urged in strong terms that no British-born Christian should be allowed to use Mohammedanism as a screen for bigamy or desertion of a Christian wife. The Bill, therefore, will declare that no Englishman on British-Indian ground could ever lawfully contract a bigamous marriage without incurring the penalties consequent on his offence. In defending his Evidence Bill, Mr. Stephen protested against the notion that either he or the Council cherished any more illwill to "the very honourable profession" of the law than Lord Mayo did to the Irish nation, or any of his colleagues to the Civil Service. He himself was "the last person in India who had any right or any wish to make such an attack on the members of the Bar." The Insolvency Bill was virtually laid on one side; Mr. Stephen admitting that it was not perhaps suited to the country at large, and that many people deemed it unsuitable even for the Presidency Towns. In the name, however, of the mercantile community of Calcutta, the Englishman hopes that the Law-member will proceed with his Bill, for "no difference of opinion exists as to the scandalous inefficiency of the present law in the Presidency Towns." With regard to the Criminal Procedure Bill, Mr. Stephen owned that the Local Governments were pressing the Supreme Government to enlarge the very limited jurisdiction of justices of the peace over her Majesty's European subjects in India. This question also has been referred to a committee.

SEVERAL Bills have been introduced into the Bengal Legislative Council. One to which Mr. Bernard stands godfather, with Mr. Campbell's approval, would empower the Municipal Commissioners to levy a tax on "persons according to their circumstances, a tax on trades and callings, a tax on the annual value of horses and lands, taxes on horses, elephants, carriages, and tolls." The enumeration of these fiscal luxuries is rather suggestive; but Mr. Campbell took care to explain that all these taxes would not be levied at one time; his object being merely to entrust the Municipalities with the right to choose between them according to circumstances. The list includes a tax on all processions not religious. Another of Mr. Bernard's Bills, suggested apparently by the late destructive fire in Calcutta, deals with the registering and inspecting of jute warehouses and the providing of an efficient fire-brigade for the capital. The Bill to provide for embankments and drainage was postponed for a month.

THE libel case against the Madras Athenæum was to receive a final hearing on the 6th February. The plaintiff's case rests on certain articles in which Lord Napier, the Governor of Madras, was charged with breach of faith for communicating to members of his Council some private documents received from General McCleverty. His Lordship's legal advisers, who seem to be rather ill-advised, contend that a charge of this nature tends to damage the Governor's public and private character. Would not his Lordship have done better to act on Lord Melbourne's principle and "let it alone?"

ON the 5th December General Brownlow had moved forward from Demagiri with the right or Chittagong column, leaving five companies of his Ghoorkas to hold Demagiri and certain posts on the Sajjak river. The 27th Punjabies and half of Colonel Hill's Mountain Battery, with ten elephants, were also to remain behind for the present. The Cachar Column, under General Bouchier, had been painfully hewing its way through the dense bamboo jungle towards Mainadhar; his active Ghoorkas clearing as they went a path for the powerful but unwieldy elephants behind them. The latest mail accounts left the General somewhere beyond Mainadhar, with everything promising well for his force. He had lately been consulting with General Nuthall what should be done with the Manipore Contingent, which the latter officer accompanies as a Political, besides looking after the police who garrison the frontier posts. It was expected that General Brownlow's Column would very soon beat up the Syloos, one of the most numerous of the Kookie or Loshai tribes; and later telegrams have, as our readers know, fulfilled that expectation. Demagiri Falls, on the Karnafoolee, are described by Captain Lewin as being some three days' journey above Burkhul, where all further progress up the river is stopped by the rapids. Up to that point, about twenty miles above Kassalong, the Karnafoolee is navigable for boats of large size all the year round. It appears that boats can proceed three days' journey northward up the Kassalong and Chingree streams, both of which fall into the Karnafoolee.

CAPTAIN LEWIN'S impressions of a voyage on the Karnafoolee differ widely from the rapturous descriptions of that river and the forest scenery on its banks, as penned by an officer writing the other day from Kassalong. According to the former the scenery along the Karnafoolee and its tributaries is generally "dull and uninteresting, the river flowing between high banks of earth, covered either with tall elephant grass or dense jungle, which effectually prevent any view being obtained of the surrounding country." At one place only was its "dull monotony of reaches of still water and walls of dark green verdure" changed to a scene of varied and bold beauty, resembling somewhat the Rhine near the Lurleiberg. Perhaps the later traveller found new beauties in the contrast suggested to him with the rivers of Eastern Bengal.

THE statement first put forth some months ago by the Times of India, that Assam was to be separated from Bengal, and placed under a Chief Commissioner, appears to have been founded on fact. A despatch from the India Office is understood to have arrived in Calcutta, sanctioning the very arrangement in question. Its advantages speak for themselves. Assam itself is large enough to be separately governed. Its interests are distinct from those of Bengal. It has never been brought under the Permanent Settlement, and its separation from an overgrown province with which it has no natural connection will give room for the development of its own productive resources under conditions the best suited to that end. As a separate province it ought to include Cachar, Chittagong, and the other districts east of the Brahmapootra and north of British Burmah. The name of the first Chief Commissioner is not yet mentioned; but there is no lack of candidates for the post.

SOME progress is being made with the coast defences of India. On Friday, the 8th December, Colonel Jervois, Director of Fortifications, in company with Major-general Norman, the members of the Torpedo Committee, and some other officers, paid a visit of inspection to the new battery now being constructed a little below Diamond Harbour for the defence of the Hooghly. When finished it will be armed with nine 9-inch guns and further protected by a line of torpedoes. Colonel Jervois had not submitted his report when the mail left; but he is understood to have spoken approvingly of the works as a whole; one or two changes only being suggested to make them thoroughly efficient. On the defences of Bombay and Aden also he has not yet reported.

A MEMORIAL in behalf of Mr. Roberts, the suspended magistrate of Calcutta, has already been signed by a large number of the residents there. At a meeting of the Bench of Justices on the 10th December a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to him for his long and useful services to the Municipality. It is said that the papers concerning his case have been laid before the Supreme Council for their consideration. The Friend of India takes Mr. Hogg's part on the whole, but the general feeling in Calcutta sets strongly on the other side, apparently with good reason. It is evident that even if Mr. Roberts was wrong, which we doubt, in urging Mr. Giles to bring his prisoner, Abdoollah, at once before him, Mr. Hogg, by his overbearing conduct and threatening language, failed to put himself in the right. Some little respect was surely due from an executive officer to the chief magistrate, and Mr. Hogg seems to have been as disrespectful as he well could be.

THE Indian Government has issued an order relieving the local governments in the Bengal Presidency from the entire control of all purely military works. The whole of these works in all stations occupied by European troops are placed under the charge of an inspector-general, aided by a proper staff of engineers, whose labours will be concentrated on a few important works at a time. If such an arrangement succeeds in preventing any more of the scandalous failures which have lately marked the progress of military works in India, the public at any rate will have small reason to complain.

THE border State of Khelat has been troubled of late with a serious quarrel between the Khan and some of his unruly nobles. These latter, disgusted probably at his employment of ministers taken from another class than their own, and at his preference of a paid army to the volunteer services of his nobles, took up arms against him, seized Quettah, which the Khan's ministers soon recovered, and finally took possession of the province of Kutchee. It is said, however, that they have come to terms, and that a peace has already been patched up with the rebel leader, Sirdar Moolla Mohammed, an old enemy of the present Khan.

THERE appears to have been a small rebellion in the little State of Banswarra, in Rajpootana. Several villages have been burned and plundered. The Chief himself has fled from his capital, and besought help from the Political Agent.

SIR SALAR JUNG'S visit to England will be delayed, it seems, by the threatened approach of famine in Hyderabad.

COLONEL BROOKE has formally invested the Maharana of Oodipore with a Grand Commandership of the Star of India. The festive ceremonies on the occasion lasted several days.

ACCORDING to a Times telegram of January 2 from Calcutta, General Bouchier has followed up the enemy to such purpose that by the 29th December he had driven a Syloo tribe to sue for peace. The terms were being considered on the date named. The Loshais are said to have suffered heavily both in life and property, while the loss on our side has been very slight. In the meantime supplies were being rapidly pushed to the front.

A LATER telegram from Calcutta gives news to the 1st January from the Loshai Expedition. Both columns were still advancing and destroying the deserted villages on their way. Only a few slight skirmishes are reported with the enemy, one tribe of whom were seeking to obtain terms of peace. If this refers to the Syloos of the former telegram, the terms in question are taking some time to arrange.

THE Madras Irrigation and Canal Company, whose new prospectus is well worth studying, have just been informed that the supply of water to the Government tanks in the Cuddapah and Kurnool districts having failed, these have been, at the urgent request of the cultivators, and with the assent of the Government, filled from the company's canal, and so the crops, which would otherwise have perished, have been saved.

To judge from the blunders committed in a memoir of Lord Ellenborough, as published in a certain daily paper, the rudiments of Indian history are still to learn among the bulk of English readers. From that memoir we are surprised to discover that General Nott "forced the Khyber Pass against the whole force of Afghanistan." It is a pity the writer did not add that General Pollock was shut up in Kandahar, or taken prisoner in Kabul. From the same enlightened source we learn that the gates of Somnath were carried off from an Indian town by "the great Akbar and placed in Cabul." We shall hear next perhaps that George III. defeated the French at Poitiers, and carried off the French King prisoner to Birmingham. It is also something new to be told that the restoration of these gates to their former resting-place was meant to reassert the honour of Hindustan against her former Afghan conquerors. We certainly were not aware that either Akbar or Mahmood of Ghuznee were Afghans; but one lives to learn strange things. Can it be that the memoir in question was written for a comic paper, and sent by mistake to the journal in which it appeared? Or has the writer of it been lately cramming too hard for the Indian Civil Service examination?

THE impending retirement of Mr. Fitzjames Stephen naturally prompts the question, who is to succeed him? No doubt there are plenty of home-bred lawyers who would deem it worth their while to undertake so high an office as the moulding and making of laws for Hindustan. In the face of men like Macaulay, Bethune, Maine, and Stephen, we can hardly question the likelihood of finding candidates of nearly equal calibre at home. But are there not lawyers in India also, whose training and capacity might recommend them at least as powerfully for the vacant post? It is a good thing to have breadth of learning and view, but are these peculiar to one country? If English experience counts for something, a ripe Indian experience ought to count for much more. For many years past Indian practice has been an excellent field for the training of lawyers and lawmakers, if we only knew how to profit by their experience. It may be invidious to mention names, but we certainly believe that a gentleman of the stamp of Mr. L. T. Prichard would prove on the whole a more efficient lawmaker for India than even Mr. F. Stephen. Even in England Mr. Prichard has made his mark as a lawyer and something else by his work on Roman Law, his recent history of India under the Crown, and his frequent lectures on Indian questions of the day. On all points of Indian law he has the mastery gained from long residence in the country itself; not merely in its Anglicised Capital, but mainly in the heart of the North-West Provinces, amidst people with whom he had to talk in their own tongue, and whose private history and habits it became his daily business to learn. His consequent sympathy with the natives of India has been tempered by his inborn shrewdness and the very range of his experiences; while his ripe English culture and past learning would always save him from imbibing rash prejudices against the mass of his countrymen in India.

MAJOR RAVERTY'S name as an Afghan scholar stands so high already, that few words are needful to recommend his latest essay, a translation of Æsop's Fables into Pushto, or the Afghan language, for the benefit of English students and of vernacular schools in the Punjab. The book is published by Messrs. Williams and Norgate, in very neat type, and on good paper, embellished with woodcuts borrowed from the well known English version of the Rev. T. James, as published by Mr. Murray. Major Raverty has done well to mould his Pushto version after the style of the best Afghan writers instead of contenting himself with the colloquial common-places of a single district like Peshawar. We can only hope his translation will meet with all the favour it deserves.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

RETROSPECT OF 1871.

THE year 1871 opened in India with the untimely death of Sir Henry Durand, at Tank on the Punjab frontier, only seven months after a long and able service of forty years had been crowned by his promotion from the Viceroy's Council to the Government of the Punjab. Before the end of the same month another of those border raids which so often break the peace of British India was reported from Bengal. Bands of Loshai savages spread havoc and dismay among the tea-planters on the Cachar frontier, slaying more than one Englishman, several natives, and carrying off, among other prisoners, an English child. A few hundred native troops and policemen were at once sent off to guard the frontier and, if possible, catch the raiders. But before all was ready for a march into the Loshai jungles the time for marching had passed away, and Lord Napier had to put off all further movements until the return of the cold weather would allow him to strike hard and to good effect. By the end of October the first movements of the troops destined to carry out his Lordship's plans began. Two columns, under Major-generals Bouchier and Brownlow respectively, took the field in the latter part of November, equipped with everything needful for a troublesome campaign amidst dense bamboo jungles. Before the year's end both columns had left their mark upon the foe, and one tribe was already seeking to make peace.

In no other part of India were the sounds of armed fighting to be heard last year. But the serious riots at Bareilly and Pillibheet in July between the Hindoos and Mohammedans, followed by a number of murderous outrages inflicted by Sikh fanatics on Mussulman butchers in the Punjab, revealed the latent strength of those religious and national hatreds which our rule in India alone keeps from breaking out into mortal conflict. Condign punishment befel the rioters and murderers in either case, and the danger threatened by the recent growth of a new fanatical movement among the Sikhs appears for the present to have passed away. A similar check has been inflicted on the Wahabi plotters in Bengal by the trial and condemnation of Ameer Khan and some of his accomplices. One sad event, the murder of the upright and widely mourned Chief Justice Norman by a Pathan from the North-West, was popularly ascribed to the same Wahabi conspiracy. But the murderer expiated his crime on the gallows without breathing a word to implicate himself or any comrade in any preconcerted plot, and nothing has yet transpired to prove the justice of the popular belief. For many months however before his death the alleged state of Mohammedan feeling in India towards our rule had continued to exercise the minds of many disputants in both countries, and the last echoes of the controversy started by Dr. Hunter's pamphlet have not yet died away. One special grievance, put forward by the Mohammedans themselves, drew from Lord Mayo's Government the expression of a desire to give Mohammedan learning fair play in the Government schools and colleges of Bengal; and Sir W. Muir in the North-West Provinces avowed his sympathy with the claim of his Mohammedan subjects to study their own classics in their own tongue.

In its foreign policy, Lord Mayo's Government was equally cautious and successful during the year. In the civil war between Shere Ali and his son Yakooob Khan, its friendly counsels bore good fruit in the timely reconciliation of the combatants and in a large concession to the just demands of Shere Ali's eldest and ablest son. On the side of Persia one old boundary dispute between her and the Khan of Khilat touching the Makran frontier has been finally settled by Major-General Goldsmid, acting as umpire for the Indian Government. A like dispute between Persia and Afghanistan regarding the province of Seistan bids fair to be settled ere long by the same judicious umpire. With Burmah and Nepal our relations throughout the year were those of peace and goodwill, and English influence induced his eccentric Majesty of Ava to proclaim free trade throughout his dominions. In Muscat Sayad Turki succeeded in displacing the late usurper, Azan bin Ghez. With its own Feudatories, from Kashmere to Hyderabad, the Indian Government has had no particular cause for quarrel. The Chiefs of Western India have been sending their sons readily to the new Rajkoomar College opened in the previous December by the Governor of Bombay. Early in the year the son of the ex-Nawab of Tonk, whose prayer for the redress of alleged wrongs has not yet been formally heard in England, was installed in his father's place; and about the same time the young Rajah of Patialah was invested by Lord Mayo with the Grand Commandership of the Indian Star.

On the 9th March Sir R. Temple opened his Budget for the new year, disclosing a surplus of about a million, mainly due to opium, which enabled him to reduce the income-tax to one per cent. on all incomes above Rs. 750 a-year. The retention of a tax so deservedly odious throughout India provoked long and warm debates, in which almost every independent member of Council followed Messrs. Robinson and Cowie in opposing the Government. Even Mr. G. Campbell, the new Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, spoke weightily against the tax; but in vain. The Government won the field by three votes, and after further debating the reduced tax was continued for another year. The dissident six however had to some extent their revenge. Mr. Inglis's powerful exposure of the evils wrought by the income-tax evoked from Lord Mayo a pledge to enquire into the history of its collection in the North-Western Provinces. The inquiry has issued in a Minute from the Supreme Government, reflecting severely on that of Sir W. Muir for the mismanagement it could not help, and the malpractices it dared to expose. But every one in India knew what value to place on an official answer which answered nothing to the point; and the censure nominally passed on Sir W. Muir resulted only in heaping fresh discredit on the head of its apparent author, Sir R. Temple.

It was in this year that the local Governments were first entrusted with the management of all revenues required for local purposes. For the first time the Supreme Council met in April at Allahabad to hear Sir W. Muir deliver his first Budget statement for the North-Western Provinces. For the first time also this year were the army and public works estimates laid in set speeches before the Viceroy's Council by the respective chiefs of those departments. In this year also the first steps were taken, with the final sanction of the Indian Minister, to raise local cesses for education on the land of Bengal, a measure which Mr. F. Stephen ably justified at Allahabad against those who denounced it as a breach of the Permanent Settlement. The formation of a new department of Trade and Agriculture, under Mr. A. O. Hume, was another important novelty in the administrative work of this year. New hill stations for British troops were opened at Chakrata and Ranikhet in the Himalayas, and at Pachmari in the Central Provinces. New failures were reported in the palatial barracks at Allahabad, Jubbulpore, Sagar, and elsewhere. In spite of a powerful protest from Lord Napier, the strength of our artillery in India was reduced by thirty guns. In the latter part of the year his Lordship began to form a great Camp of Exercise round Delhi; and, in spite of a passing alarm of cholera, some thirty thousand soldiers of all arms were gathered in camp before the year's end in order to practise the manœuvres that might be demanded in a regular campaign.

During the year steady progress has been made with Indian Railways. For the new State Railways a gauge of 3 feet 3 inches was adopted as a general rule, the only exception as yet made being in favour of a broad gauge line through the Nizam's dominions. In the spring of the year a complete line of railway from Bombay to Madras was opened; one link only, the bridge over the Kistna, being still to finish. On the last day of 1870 the extension of the Eastern Bengal Railway to Goalundo in Assam was formally declared complete. Several of the new State lines are being pushed forward, especially those through Rajpootana and the Punjab. In Irrigation works too the year has not been wholly fruitless. In the Punjab and the North-Western Provinces many miles of railway were rendered unserviceable and some bridges destroyed by the unusually heavy floods of the rainy season. The crops in Bengal and several towns in Oudh suffered severely from the same cause. At Jaunpore 17,000 houses were buried in the swollen Goomtie. At Lucknow 40 inches of rain fell in five days. Ghazipore was sadly damaged by the floods. Gwalior likewise suffered greatly, and half the stock of cattle in Bengal is said to have perished. In Kandeish on the other hand and part of Central India the scanty rainfall produced a certain scarcity, and gave rise to many fears for the coming season. In most parts of India however the year has ended with fair or improving prospects.

The legislative work of the year leads off with an Act extending the Paper Currency by the introduction of five-rupee notes, and the circulation in any province of notes issued in any other. A Bill for amending the Law of Evidence, by empowering the Judge to question any of the witnesses at pleasure during any part of the trial, was brought in by Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, but appears to have been delayed by the strenuous opposition of the Indian bar. From the same quarter issued a well-considered measure for dealing with the Criminal Tribes throughout India, a measure which has since passed through Council. Colonel Strachey's Bill regarding advances by Government for the improvement of estates, and a measure for regulating the rates charged on irrigated lands, have also become law. Some new provisions have been added to the European Vagrancy Act, and the Bill for legalising Brahmo Marriages has at length got over the difficulties which delayed its course for many months past.

The appointment of a Select Committee on Indian Finance in the early days of the last Session of Parliament has issued in the taking of voluminous evidence, to which as much more will probably be added before the Committee can close its labours. Another Committee, appointed later in the Session, will shortly resume its inquiry into the important question of direct railway routes from England to India. In the House of Commons, Mr. Grant Duff defended with his usual ability the refusal of the India Office to redress the alleged grievances of the Nawab of Bengal. Mr. Haviland Burke's demand for an inquiry into those grievances was rejected by nearly two to one of his hearers, after a debate in which most of the speakers sided with Mr. Grant Duff. Mr. Eastwick's intended motion to resuscitate the old local Indian Army never came off, nor did Mr. Cardwell's Army Bill attempt directly to deal with that side of the military problem. The peerage granted to Sir W.

Mansfield strengthened the debating power of the Upper House with a critic of some authority on Indian affairs. Lord Sandhurst's first speech, levelled at the practice of sending boy recruits out to India, drew public attention to an admitted evil, with such effect that the Ministry pledged themselves to weed out all youths under twenty from regiments ordered on Indian service. In the progress of the Army Bill through the Commons, Sir C. Wingfield procured the revision of a clause concerning the mode of compensating officers in the new line regiments for the bonuses they would have received from their juniors on retirement.

The India Office turned a willing ear to a deputation of gentlemen anxious to secure their aid in making a good ship-channel between India and Ceylon. A special engineer was appointed to examine and report upon various rival schemes for that end, and the result of his enquiries tends to justify the movement begun by Sir James Elphinstone. Some steps have also been taken, with the sanction of the India Office, to resume the long-neglected work of surveying the Indian seas and rivers, and utilising the many natural harbours along the Indian coasts. The opening of the Civil Engineering College at Cooper's Hill, on August 5, was an event of special promise for the future well-being of the Public Works Department in India. Not less important, for other reasons, was the completion of the Mont Cenis Tunnel, with its necessary consequence of a shortened journey to the East.

The death of Major-General Broome early in the year on his way home deprived the Indian Government of an able and tried Accountant-General. His place has since been worthily filled by Mr. G. Kellner. Another able officer, Sir George Jameson, who had long served as Auditor to the India Office, died at home only a few months after he had won his knighthood. By the retirement of Mr. Eliot Macnaghten, the Indian Council lost one of its oldest members, one of the last remaining links that connect it with the old East India Company. A late member of the same Council, Sir Proby Cautley, the well-remembered architect of the Ganges Canal, died at home in the beginning of the year. Sir George Pollock was appointed Constable of the Tower in fit succession to Sir John Burgoyne. By the death of Mrs. Manning, the authoress of "Ancient and Mediæval India," the people of that country lost a popular exponent of their ancestral lore, and a powerful advocate of their own highest interests in the present day. In the last days of the year died the Earl of Ellenborough, whose short period of rule in India derived its chief lustre from the victories of Nott and Pollock in Afghanistan, of Sir C. Napier in Sindh, and of Lord Gough over the Mahrattas of Gwalior. Among the new knights of the Star of India the names of Sir John Kaye, the well-known historian and Political Secretary to the India Office; of Sir Henry S. Maine, late law-member of the Viceroy's Council, and of Sir Thomas Pears, Military Secretary to the India Office, deserve special mention. In India Mr. Davies succeeded Sir H. Durand as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and General Barrow replaced Mr. Davies as Chief Commissioner of Oudh. At home Sir James Colville became one of the first paid Judges of the remodelled Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

CAN THE MUSSULMANS BE HELPED?

The Madras Times remarks what a grievous fact is this ruin of a great community whose history teems with records of valiant deeds, of hard-won battles, of brilliant conquests, of magnificent cities ruled by great men; whose literature teems with graceful and imaginative poetry, with histories far excelling anything that Europe could show in the same period, with devotional works that shine like meteors in the dark sky of Indian idolatry. What monuments have they not left of their glory? That halo of splendour which surrounded India and blinded mediæval Europe dates from after the year 1000 A.D. It rose, grew, and set with the Mussulman power. The Indian heroes are Akbar and Aurungzebe, Baber, and Shah Jehan. What other nation ever carved out the world like those fierce Arabs and Pathans who followed the standard of the Prophet? What other race have had such a history?—what other such a fall? Do we wish to know what Indian Mahommedanism is now? Go into Triplicane and spend a morning in tramping through its filthy squalid streets. See the Shady Mahal, the palaces of the Begums. Regard the bailiffs who watch the houses of the highest nobility. Learn how every living soul is overwhelmed by debt. Note that not one respectable man has a respectable employment. See the men whose fathers ruled provinces, led armies, dictated treaties, built some cities and razed others—they slink from their houses to their harems, and from their harems to their houses—they are surrounded by hosts of servants and dependants whom they cannot dismiss because they cannot pay them. Hear their plaintive cry about the reduction of their pensions, of the insufficiency of their allowances, of their despair on account of their children, among whom in the next generation must be divided the pittance that is not enough for one family now. Everywhere the streets are littered with the debris of falling houses, of ruined walls, of rotting tatters. The gardens of great houses are overrun with squalid huts, whose tenants are too poor to pay rent, whose owners are too poor to repair them. The tanks are silted up till they are but stagnant pools. The finest house of all, far better than the Shady Mahal, and built years ago for a favourite begum, but never finished, because will and means could not agree, is at this moment being turned into a vegetable bazaar. Mortgaged to a native who never received his interest, the building changed hands by a foreclosure, was vainly offered to the Town-hall Committee, and now is doomed to be a vegetable market. Go where you will, it is still the same. At Vellore, at Kurnool, at Bangalore, at Mysore, and even at Hyderabad, are the same terrible symptoms of decay. The sons of men who were Tippoo Sultan's Amildars and Asophs are now vegetating on paltry pensions that would not have kept their fathers in clothes. Telling daily of the great deeds of their ancestors, they yet are beggars, hidalgos without a cash and without a career, looked upon as suspicious characters, but believing themselves to be the only salt of the earth. Is such a state of things to be cured by university scholarships? By the encouragement of the Arabic and Persian languages? Or by any other rose-water process? They were rulers, are now subjects. That is the key of the pitiful story of poverty and decadence. The evil may be remedied to-morrow, were tables but to be turned and Patans, Moguls, and Arabs once more rule India. But the Mutiny has conclusively shown that the English people will not have this. Nor are the Hindus particularly anxious to change their present masters for those who rendered half India a desert and allowed no man to feel that what he had was his own. What is the good of mincing matters in the face of the great fact that everywhere stares us in the face? The lion will not lie down with the lamb; the Mussulmans will not submit to plough or trade, to lend or manufacture, like their Hindu fellow-subjects. With them fighting is the only noble trade, the only occupation that provides fame and conquest, riches and honour, at other folks' expense. Shall we set India in a blaze for the sake of giving the Mahommedans a chance of a career? They are sulky because they have gone to the wall; because a stronger lion roars over the land; because the reign of law and order is sufficiently powerful to make force and violence neither profitable nor safe. They are poor, because they live upon pensions and may not lend at usury; because where they have accumulated wealth they live upon the capital. Do what we will under every possible English rule men cannot live unless they work for their living. But the genuine Mahommedan will not work, although the Lubbay shows how shrewd a trader he might be if he would but try. They hold aloof from all western education, scorn to learn any language but their own, and hence have little chance of Government employment. But are we to engage ignorant incapables, although of noble lineage and descended from doughty warriors, because they do not choose to adopt means for rendering themselves capable? We say not one single word to depreciate or offend what we deem a very noble race of men. Far be it from us to add one drop to the bitter cup they have to drink. The stars in their courses have fought against the Mahommedan. His place, his honour, his occupation, his profits have all gone. While things are as they are, Mogul and Patans have no hope. They will not condescend to mix with or grow like the modern busy world, and hence the world marches on without them, leaves them far behind, hopelessly lagging in the race. Blame not the world, it must march on. Blame not the Governments, they must go with the crowd they have to rule. Blame not the Mussulmans, but rather pity that stern fate which has left them stranded on a desert shore, fixed when all else moves on. Rather let us blame men like Dr. Hunter, who would quack of pills and plasters, who take no care to learn what the disease is, how it came, or what its symptoms. Such men preach disappointment, are the storm-birds of evil. They hide the truth while professing to seek it, and will look anywhere, both for the evil and its cure, rather than follow the path of simple observation, and honestly recording what they thus might learn.

HOSPITAL STOPPAGES.—Agreeably to a decision of the Government of India, the rate of recovery on account of hospital stoppages from European artificers employed in regiments of British cavalry and brigades and batteries of Royal Artillery shall be at three annas a day, with reference to Art. 275, page 483 of Jameson's code.

THE MEMORIAL ON BEHALF OF MR. ROBERTS.

The following memorial is, we believe, in circulation for signature:—

TO HIS HONOUR THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL, &c., &c.
The memorial of the undersigned inhabitants of Calcutta respectfully sheweth:—

"1. That your memorialists have read with extreme regret the resolution of your Honour, announcing the dismissal of Mr. John Blessington Roberts from the offices of police magistrate and coroner of this city.

"2. That Mr. Roberts has held these offices for a period of nine years as magistrate, and fourteen years as coroner, and that, during that time, he has, in his performance of these offices, possessed, your memorialists believe, the confidence of successive Governments, of the judges of the High Court, of the mercantile and trading bodies, and of the community at large.

"3. That his decisions have generally been unquestioned, or, when questioned, have been upheld.

"4. That his long experience in connection with the police has given him an influence with that force, and an insight into its organisation, which have always been exercised for good.

"5. That, brought as he has been most prominently before the public, by his ability, energy, and capacity for work, the public have always recognised in him fearless independence, strict integrity, and perfect honesty of purpose, and even in his "self-assertive" manner have not lost sight of the purity of his motives and his desire to act only for the public good.

"6. That your memorialists feel assured that no one can recognise more strongly than your Honour the necessity of preserving intact the independence of the Magisterial Bench, as well as that of the Coroner's Court; but, in the absence of any expression of opinion from your Honour on this subject, your memorialists fear that the public, reading the resolution, will consider that the magisterial office is held by your Honour to be subordinate to the Executive.

"7. That your memorialists are unhesitatingly of opinion that Mr. Roberts's action as a justice of the peace has been productive of good to the community—that by his unceasing and unflinching opposition to extravagant expenditure he has earned the gratitude of all ratepayers of the town, native and European; and it is a matter of deep regret to your memorialists that for taking so prominent a part in municipal affairs he should seem to have incurred your Honour's animadversion.

"8. That there should have been a public collision between the magistrate and the commissioner of police your memorialists allow to be an occurrence greatly to be regretted, and one which properly calls for official notice. Your memorialists find that in your Honour's opinion Mr. Roberts is chiefly to blame in the case which has led to the resolution depriving him of his appointments. While regretting this, it does appear to your memorialists, after the most careful perusal of your Honour's remarks, that, taken in their most unfavourable light, the charges against Mr. Roberts amount simply to charges of indiscretion or error of judgment.

"9. That these charges should be considered of so serious a nature as to necessitate the ruin and degradation of an old, useful, and tried public servant, near the close of what your Honour admits has been 'an honourable career,' is a matter of deep regret to your memorialists, and one which, in their opinion, calls for an earnest appeal to your Honour.

"10. That your memorialists therefore respectfully pray that your Honour will graciously take the case into your re-consideration, your memorialists hoping that, after such re-consideration, your Honour will find it in your power to reinstate Mr. Roberts in the positions which he has so long and so usefully filled. And, as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray."—Englishman.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

General Bouchier and Staff, with the exception of the Brigade-Major and Dr. Buckle (who were left behind to make arrangements connected with Captain Hidayat Ali's coolies, who had suffered so terribly from cholera), left Cachar for Luckipur on Nov. 23. Beyond that place great and, it must be said, unexpected difficulties were experienced with regard to roads. It was understood that the civil authorities would have done something at any rate in the way of clearing a track, but in point of fact nothing whatever had been done. There was, however, a path known to the planters which required very little repair as far as the Alnee Garden on the Barak, but from thence towards Mynadthur it was as much as the Gurkhas themselves could do to scramble on with their arms; as to elephants getting along, they might as well have attempted to scale the skies. The troops accordingly were set to work, and by the 28th the road was practicable for unladen elephants as far as Mynadthur, while the stores were sent up by water. By the 2nd December the Sappers and 44th had carried on the road for six miles beyond Mynadthur, and the telegraph is completed as far as the road. The weather was glorious, the climate agreeable; leeches and ticks were found less troublesome than had been feared, and the health of the expedition, with the exception of course of Hidayat Ali's coolies, was all that could be desired. Great indignation appears to have been felt in camp at the inhuman neglect with which these poor creatures had been treated. It is distinctly asserted that the embarking and medical authorities protested against 850 coolies being crowded into two flats, and begged that at any rate an European officer might be sent with them; but that the protest and petition were alike poohpoohed by the Bengal Government. The result, we know, was the death of 151 coolies, and that about 50 more are incapacitated by their reduced condition for all work. The rest of the force (we speak of the left column) is in excellent spirits and first-rate order. The only casualties have been the two deaths from drowning we formerly mentioned. Officers and men are taking kindly to the rough life, and rough it certainly is. From the general downwards nearly every one has sent back his pony, trusting henceforward to his two legs for transport. The rations are of the simplest, and as regards the beef, of the toughest—commissariat rum the only artificial means of exhilaration. So long as there is water enough in the river for the boats there will be no serious impediment to progress; but a little above Mynadthur the Barak is reported to shallow suddenly, and then coolies will be almost the only resource in the way of carriage, for the elephants will apparently have enough to do to carry themselves. As to the warlike prospects, it is said that Mr. Edgar is rather anxious about Sukpilal's attitude. The messengers whom he sent some time ago to that chief have been detained by him, or at any rate have not returned. The military authorities, on the other hand, would perhaps be glad if their operations were relieved from the complication of Sukpilal's ambiguous alliance.—Pioneer.

THE SCENERY ON THE LINE OF MARCH.

From the private letter of an officer with the Chittagong column of the Loshai Expeditionary Force we (Englishman) extract the following interesting description of some of the scenery on the line of march:—

"You have no idea what a pretty river the Karafoola is. It is not very broad or anything wonderful in volume, but it has not the muddy-looking sticky banks one sees in the rivers of Eastern Bengal. The villages, too, are far better kept and tidier than Bengal ones, and the trim plots of cultivated ground almost remind one of home. The river winds a good deal, and the banks, instead of being the dead level of the Assam rivers, are broken by hills covered with trees and creepers, some hanging almost perpendicularly to the water, and from a good height, too. One of the reaches we came on just after breakfast put any scenery I have seen as yet in the country quite into the shade. A long bend to the left, which bank was a succession of hills and dells covered with trees and creepers—the trees not of a uniform green, but of almost every shade, except of course the brilliant hues one sees in the American forests, and the hills rising in places straight up from the water; here and there a cottage surrounded by a garden closed in, by a bamboo fence as neatly made as if by a Scotch gardener. At the end of the reach a view of one range rising beyond another, and the right bank well cultivated and wooded. The beauty of the scene fairly took us all by surprise. The whole of the river scenery till past Rungamuttee, and one-half way to Kasalong, continues the same. Of course, where the banks get higher, they shut out all view except up and down the reaches, and then one as usual gets tired of the monotony of trees upon trees. I am wrong to say I have seen nothing to touch this scenery, for I was forgetting the views one gets of the snowy ranges after leaving Jhelum—both styles are equally good in their way. Rungamuttee and Kasalong are on hills at bends of the river, where the jungle has been cleared away, and they are both as green as Calcutta. In fact, the fog is far worse than, and the dew nearly as bad as that of Calcutta. The fog comes on in the evening about eight, and lasts till between nine and ten the next morning; then it clears, and for a couple of hours it is charming; but the afternoon sun, and particularly that of the evening, is very strong and disagreeable. Kasalong is the first depot after Chittagong, and a small steamer plies between Rungamuttee and Kasalong to convey up flats with troops and stores. Demagoree, Lower and Upper Burksball, and Kasalong, are all on the left bank; Rungamuttee is on the right."

have been ordered to march, and are expected in at Mynadur this evening, 4th Dec., 1871, their place at the Barak Ferry being taken by the 42nd Assam Light Infantry. This at present is the disposition of the force, the guns, and some of the 22nd Native Infantry being still at Cachar. General Bouchier, Colonel Roberts, &c., have gone on to the front, and a few days hence it is hoped that a post will be established at Tipi Mookh, the first depot in the Loshai country, where large quantities of stores will be collected for the force in advance. A road up to this point will soon be completed, so that the left column may be said to have made a fair start. The telegraph is being rapidly pushed on, and as there is spare wire, it will doubtless be carried on about thirty miles beyond Tipi Mookh. The Commissariat arrangements seem good on the whole, but the salt provisions might be of a better quality. The great thing to be dreaded is sickness, especially in regard to sanitary arrangements, as there are at present no public establishments detailed for that purpose—get cholera into camp in these dense, damp roads, and the scene will be awful. The coolies from Darjeeling have suffered dreadfully at the camp near Chuttuk, 146 dead from cholera, and the remainder having dysentery more or less amongst them. Whether the Loshais make a stand or not is on the cards. There is a rumour that Sookpial, owing to pressure brought on him by neighbouring tribes, has turned against us; if so, we may safely calculate on a morning fight through the jungles. On the Manipore side, Major-General Nuthal, political agent of Manipore, makes a flank movement with the Rajah's contingent, but more in the capacity of a patrol than of an actively engaged party. A large fleet of provision-boats are under the command of Mr. Patch, district superintendent of police, specially placed at the disposal of the military authorities from the Sylhet district. Up to date, all seems promising; and it is to be hoped that success will crown the expedition, and we shall be able to show something for the vast expenditure incurred.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING.—We (Indian Daily News) learn that a Commission has been appointed at the instance of the Government of India to inquire into the Government printing system, with reference, not to any particular presidency, but to all India. The Commission will be composed of officials drawn from various sections of the public service, and will contain one or more members selected from the non-official community. The necessity for such a step has been harped upon by the Indian press until the subject has become wearisome; it is satisfactory to find the Government of India making inquiry into the matter.

THE BURNING OF THE "LADY MELVILLE."—George Cole and William Clapham—who were charged with having on the 14th of October last, on board the Lady Melville, then lying in the port of Calcutta, taken a lighted lamp to the after-port of the 'tween decks of the said ship, where spirits, to wit rum, were kept in casks, and there, while drawing off the rum into buckets, held the said lighted lamp close to it, whereby they did an act with fire so rashly and negligently as to endanger the lives of persons then being on the said ship, and thereby the said George Cole and William Clapham committed an offence and became punishable under section 285 of the Indian Penal Code—were tried at the Calcutta Criminal Sessions on Saturday. Clapham was acquitted, and Cole sentenced to six weeks' simple imprisonment.

THE LATE CAPTAIN J. P. BASEVI OF THE SURVEY DEPARTMENT.—"India Office, London, Oct. 26, 1871.—To his Excellency the Right Hon. the Governor-general of India in Council.—My Lord,—I have received, with feelings of deep regret, the melancholy news of the death of Captain Basevi, while engaged in the completion of the pendulum observations in the Chang Chemmo Valley, which had already been announced by telegraph; but the details of which I have only received with your Excellency's despatch, dated the 1st of September (No. 12) 1871. 2. I have caused a copy of Major Montgomerie's letter to be forwarded to the President of the Royal Society, and I shall be prepared to consider any proposals which may hereafter be made by your Excellency's Government with regard to the suggestions contained in it; but in the meantime I could not allow a mail to leave England without expressing my sense of the great loss which has been sustained by the public service and by science in the death of this accomplished and devoted officer. The series of observations which Captain Basevi had so nearly completed will form a lasting memorial of his services to science, while his previous career had already entitled him to rank among the foremost of the distinguished scientific officers now serving under your Excellency's Government.—I have, &c. (Signed) ARGYLL."

AFFAIRS AT BHAMO.—From the diary of the officiating assistant Political Agent at Bhamo for the month of September, 1871, we learn that a Panthay envoy from Nanthabet arrived at Bhamo on the 10th of that month. According to the information communicated by him, it seems that the Panthays are considerably harassed about the town of Momein by marauding bands of Chinese, and it appears hopeless to expect a resuscitation of trade between Burmah and Yunnan until these bands have been subdued, or until they cease hostilities against the Panthays. The envoy confirmed the news of the defeat of the great leader of banditti Lisitani, and the capture of his stronghold Yilaw, but added that the Panthays have not attempted to retain possession of that place, contenting themselves with doing as much damage as they could to the Chinese robber and his village, and then retiring—a course which they seem to have pursued on many different occasions and in many places. According to the statements of the emissary, the Panthays are in complete and peaceable possession of the whole of the north and centre of Yunnan; and it is only in the southern and south-western confines of the country that the Chinese continue to harass them. The commanders of the marauding parties are not, the Panthays assert, commissioned by the Government of the Emperor of China; nor is there any regular Chinese army operating in any portion of Yunnan, or against the Panthays at all, even on the east and south-east. It is round about Momein that the most serious fighting occurs, and that the Chinese bands are the most irrepressible. The emissary pointed out that the many years' fighting had caused the number of reckless scoundrels to increase, so that any noted Chinese leader can easily replace his losses in men; whilst the stricter discipline of the Panthays, affording fewer opportunities for plunder and for the satisfaction of lust and revengeful feelings, throws the majority of these soldiers of fortune into the ranks of their enemies. The true Panthays are comparatively few in number, and their forces are largely composed of Yunnan Chinese, who have given in their adhesion to the new rule, every chieftain who joins them being received with open arms, and rewarded with an appointment or a title. At the last interview the emissary repeatedly pressed upon the attention of the Political Agent that we must not hope to see trade suddenly revive the instant that the Chinese bandits succumbed, as it would take some years for the country to settle down completely; but he was very positive that directly hostilities ceased trade would recommence, and gradually but surely increase.

fire temples, where, in addition to the usual prayers offered for the relief of the sick and suffering, special prayers, prepared by the Dastoor or high priests, were said. Hindoos of different castes and sections had also two prayer meetings at their own temples in Bombay. The Jews, at the invitation of the Sassoon family, held a prayer-meeting at their synagogue at Byculla. The Suni Mahomedans held a similar meeting at their mosque in Khoja Mohla; while the Shias, the majority of whom are Moguls, also met together to pray in their mosque by direction of his Highness Aga Khan. The following may give an idea of the general character of the prayers for the Prince:—

"O! Almighty Hormuzd! We, Thy humble servants, the Zoroastrians, offer our united, sincere, and earnest prayer to Thee, to restore his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the eldest son of her most gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, to health and strength. Though his medical advisers have given up hopes of his recovery, yet we humbly beseech Thee, as the Supreme Healer, to restore him to health. O! Preserver of Health, let Thy beneficent influence work upon our beloved Prince, so that the malady may be immediately removed, and that he may be spared to rule over us hereafter. O! Merciful Providence! Grant us the boon that we ask of Thee! that our hearts may be relieved of the deep anxiety into which we have fallen!"

"O Supreme Being, we Thine humble creatures prostrate ourselves before Thy feet and beseech Thee. We have no other supporter to look up to, and therefore depend solely on Thy protection. We offer up prayers unanimously and devotedly in order that thou mayst show Thy mercy to the Heir-Apparent of the British Throne and save him.

"When human efforts avail not, we naturally invoke aid from above. In the same manner we have met here to seek succour from Thee. Therefore, Oh Ocean of Mercy, have compassion on us and remove our sorrows. His Royal Highness is in a critical state of health and is now suffering intensely. We therefore pray that Thou may be pleased to save the Prince.

"Our country has suffered too long from tyranny and oppression at the hands of barbarous and despotic rulers. Oh God, Thou hast now given us the peaceful and benign rule of our Most Gracious Queen. Thou art merciful, and canst therefore administer relief to the son of our Queen. Why shouldst Thou now be angry and give pain to those who have made us happy? We cannot but feel sympathy for our Queen. The ruler and ruled are spoken of as one body, and it is therefore with difficulty that we can bear our sorrows consequent on the precarious state of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. It is said that a ruler has sometimes to atone for the sins of his subjects, and if the present illness of the Prince is so accounted for, we prefer our united prayer to the Almighty God that thou mayst be pleased to save our Prince."

THE PAY OF THE BOMBAY POLICE.

The following important letter from Government to the Municipality of Bombay has been published:—

"Bombay Castle, Dec. 15.—To the Clerk to the Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay.

"Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters dated respectively 18th and 24th November last (Nos. 145 and 157), forwarding certain Resolutions noted below,* passed by the Worshipful Bench of Justices at meetings held on the 16th and 23rd ult.

2. "In reply, I am directed to intimate that the course pursued by the Government in respect of the matters to which the Resolutions refer was the necessary consequence of the action taken by the Justices at their meetings of 8th May and 10th June, 1871, when Resolutions directly opposed to the provisions of the law were passed by a majority of the Bench and communicated to Government.

3. "The letters which acknowledged the receipt of those Resolutions informed the Bench that they had exceeded their powers, and that their acts could not be recognised. But notwithstanding the warning thus conveyed to the Justices that their proceedings were illegal, the Resolutions were not withdrawn, and the objectionable portion of them has been re-affirmed, his Excellency regrets to observe, by the first of the Resolutions now under acknowledgment.

4. "It may be remarked that even if the Bench had just grounds to complain of the withdrawal by the Government in April last, of the grant towards the maintenance of the police, such a fact would form no justification for their direction to the Municipal Commissioner to stop, after a certain sum had been exhausted, the payment of the Police from the Municipal Fund, which is expressly made

* "That the Bench protests against the action of Government in ordering the Municipal Officers to pay the police for the months of September and October without requesting them to obtain the sanction of the Bench of Justices, and in opposition to the resolution of the Bench on the 14th of June last."

"That the conduct of the Municipal Commissioner and Controller in acting in this matter without receiving the sanction of the Bench is highly reprehensible, and deserving the severest censure of the Bench."

"That the Bench, in thanking Government for their promptness in coming to the relief of the Municipality, respectfully asks that the amount taken from the Municipal Fund to pay the police for September and October may be deducted from the sum of two lacs thus placed to the debit of the Municipality, and also that the pay of the police for November may be taken out of the same sum instead of out of the Municipal Fund."

liable by law for that expenditure. The action of the Government in the withdrawal of the contribution was dictated by an anxious desire to avoid the necessity of imposing new taxation in the city of Bombay, and by the belief, which his Excellency still entertains, that the diminution of the means at the disposal of the Bench occasioned by the loss of the contribution might be effectually met by a careful reduction of expenditure in other departments.

5. "It appears, moreover, to have escaped the recollection of the Bench that the withdrawal of the Government grant towards the expenses of the Police was accompanied by a contemporaneous relief of the city of Bombay from an amount of taxation which would largely have exceeded the contribution from Government. At the time when his Excellency the Governor stated the intentions of the Government with respect to the financial arrangements for the current year, and intimated that the share which would fall on Bombay of the new taxation which had been rendered necessary by the state of the finances would be obtained by a withdrawal of the Police grant, there was on the table of the Legislative Council a Bill, which subsequently became law, imposing additional taxation upon the whole non-agricultural population of the Presidency. Under that Bill a very large sum would have been levied in the city of Bombay, but by the 3rd section thereof the city was removed from its operation. No doubt, if when the measure was before the Council, the Bench had intimated to the Government that they had no desire that the city should be exceptionally relieved from the heavier taxation which was about to be imposed on the rest of the Presidency, and that in their opinion the preferable course would be that the Government should continue their contribution to the police, and at the same time subject the city to the burden of new taxation, such a communication would have received the consideration it deserved. No such opinion, however, found expression, nor was a word indicative of disapproval offered to Act I. of 1871 of the local Legislature during the lengthened period that the Bill was under discussion in the Council. It appears, therefore, to the Government that the claim made by the Bench on the part of the city to receive the grant for the police at the same time that the city has been exempted from the taxation imposed on the rest of the Presidency solely on the ground that the grant has been withdrawn is inconsistent with equity and unreasonable.

6. "His Excellency in Council does not forget that one ground of exception urged against the withdrawal of the police grant was that it took effect in the middle of the financial year, and consequently disturbed the Budget provisions which had been fixed in anticipation that the grant would be received. But I am to state, in reply, that though this objection was necessarily foreseen, no doubt was entertained that the balance of the income and expenditure could be restored by proper retrenchment, and that the public might thus be saved from the burden of additional taxation. And I am directed to add that it would appear that the inconvenience of a measure which thus necessitated a reconsideration of expenditure after the financial year had commenced was not considered of much account by the Bench, inasmuch as their contribution to the expenses of the Contagious Diseases Act was similarly withdrawn by them from financial reasons of a like character.

7. "With reference to the resolution of the Worshipful Bench communicated in your letter of the 24th ult., I am instructed to inform the Justices that the loan made to them to enable them to meet their pressing liabilities was advanced from Imperial Funds, and not from Provincial Revenues; and that, therefore, the proposal that the municipality should be allowed to deduct the expense of the police for the months of September, October, and November 1871, from the sum which they have been lent is one, which, even if it were in other respects reasonable, his Excellency in Council is wholly precluded from entertaining.

8. "I am to add, that since the passing of Act II. of 1865, his Excellency in Council, with the view of giving a fair trial to the experiment in self-government then initiated, has refrained, as much as possible, from interfering in the proceedings of the Bench or of the Executive Municipal officers. It has also been his desire to avoid the imposition of new taxation; and although he has regretted that the measures he has adopted with this object have not met with the concurrence of the Justices, he sees no reason to doubt that this policy, which he would desire still to pursue, is the best for the interests of those whom they represent. His Excellency in Council has lent a willing ear to every legitimate proposal of the Bench for the reduction of expenditure, and has been always prepared to give to all proper suggestions on their part his careful consideration.

9. "His Excellency in Council trusts that he is not wrong in presuming that the Justices have no desire to put forward claims which they do not believe to be justified by the Acts of the Legislature under which the Bench is constituted, and that they will refrain from persisting in a course which has been declared to be illegal by competent professional advisers. He would fain believe that the resolutions which are before him have originated in a misconception by the Justices of their powers, and a misapprehension of the circumstances under which they were called upon to act. But in view of the terms in which these resolutions are expressed, he is constrained to record his conviction that it would have been an abdication of the proper functions of Government to have permitted the Justices to arrogate to themselves an authority with which the law had not invested them, and to have allowed them to jeopardise the safety and tranquillity of the city by the measures which they had adopted to prevent the payment of the police from the fund specially charged by law with that expenditure.—I have, &c., “E. W. RAVENSCROFT,

“ Acting Chief Secretary to Government.”

POLICE TORTURE.—Two of the police of Hyderabad in Sind have actually been convicted of torturing an unfortunate accused. They bound him hand and foot in a field, and then deliberately set to work to burn him from his shoulder to his wrist with a metal chillum, from which they smoked comfortably between whiles. They were convicted! A noteworthy fact; but still more remarkable that the judge convicted them despite the verdict of the native assessors that they were guiltless, and punished them as severely as they deserved to be punished. One was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, and to pay a fine of Rs. 500, or to undergo imprisonment for a further term of two years; the other to five years and a fine of Rs. 250, or two years' further imprisonment.—Dellii Gazette.

SAD DEATH OF A LITTLE EUROPEAN GIRL.—We regret to hear of a fatal accident which occurred at the Custom House yesterday. The youngest but one of Mr. White's (the head clerk of the Custom House, who lives on the premises) children, a little girl of nineteen months, was missed by the parents about half past eight A.M. Unperceived, it appears, she made her way to a circular earthen vessel, about twenty inches deep, and little less in diameter, lying in the compound, a few feet from the house, and which contained very little if anything above nine inches of water—in her childish effort to get at the water she apparently overbalanced herself, and went down headforemost. When discovered, within fifteen minutes of the search, she was found with her little feet up, and quite out of the vessel, and her head fully immersed. Life seemed extinct, as all efforts,—at the Charitable Dispensary close by, whither she was instantly conveyed, and where Mr. Sub-Assistant Surgeon Lookmanjee was present at the time,—to revive her failed. We sincerely sympathise with the parents in this their sudden affliction.—Sindian, Dec. 9.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, Dec. 10.—The improved business done in the previous week has been maintained, and prices, moreover, are in several instances higher. First holders are now firm, while the demand from Zanzibar, Guzerat, and Marwar continues. In Yarns a small business for foreign counts has been done, though prices are firm. Metals generally show an advance, but sales have been limited, owing to stocks being small and holders firm.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, Dec. 16.—Cotton: The market has been very firm, and the prices of Old and of New Cotton have advanced Rs. 7 to 10 per candy. The purchases for export aggregate about 7,300 candies, of which 3,800 candies were of Old Cotton, and 3,500 candies of New Cotton, deliverable between this time and April next.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, Dec. 16.—EXCHANGE: A very limited business has been done this week, at a decline of 1-32d. to 1-16d. The rate on China for 60 days' sight House Bills is Rs. 21s for 100 dollars.

ALLOWANCE FOR WINE ON PASSAGE.—It is notified that in addition to the actual cost of a passage to England which the last para. of G.G.O. No. 785 of 1869 provides shall be issued to officers of the Indian service, who are entitled to a passage at the public expense, the Government of India has decided that when such cost excludes wine, &c., they shall be allowed one rupee four annas a day for the estimated number of days.

SICK LEAVE.—We have again to call attention to the extremely arbitrary manner in which the Secretary of State for India in Council deals with the claims of officers of the old Indian Army. It is bad enough to find their furlough pay reduced from 2s. to 1s. 11d. a rupee, but what shall be said of officers being invalidated home on six months' medical certificate by the authorities in India, and then finding that the authorities in Charles-street have quietly ignored the action of their subordinates, and relegated the officers in question to the miserable pittance of the retired list? We pointed out some time ago a gross case of injustice of this description, wherein an officer had incurred heavy expenses, and had received advances from his agents on the faith of the pay-papers which he produced on arrival in England. To whose influence is this miserable, illegal, cutting-down policy to be attributed? The answer is easy, if, as we surmise, Major-General Sir George Balfour, since his retreat from Pall Mall, has been at the Duke of Argyll's elbow. Indeed, the letter of Sir George Balfour to the Times intimates as much, for the Duke had asked him his opinion on Indian Military Finance. The India Office may be congratulated on having received this accession of strength in the shape of a disciple of old Joe Hume, who, radical reformer as he was, knew pretty well how to turn the cutting-down process to profitable account.—Broad Arrow.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

WARRANT STAFF PAY.

In order to remove a misapprehension that appears to exist in regard to the admission of Warrant Officers of the "Warrant Staff Pay" entered in the scale of pay, &c., in paragraph 7 of G.O. No. 69, dated Jan. 22, 1868, it is notified for general information that no Warrant Officer in receipt of staff or consolidated salary is entitled to any portion of the "Warrant Staff Pay," even though the departmental staff pay which he may be receiving is of less amount, or though his consolidated salary is less in amount than the "total receipts when in effective employ" of his grade as entered in the last column of the Scale, excepting when it is specially sanctioned by Government.

2. The Warrant Staff Pay entered in the G.O. in question is intended only for those departmental warrant officers who are serving in positions to which no staff allowance has been assigned. Where a staff salary has been laid down, its amount has been fixed with reference to the duty to be performed, and it alone should be received by the holder of the appointment in addition to the "Net or Warrant Pay" and "Indian Warrant Allowances" of his grade.

3. No reductions should, however, be made in salaries that are now passed; but the salaries of all who may be newly appointed, or who may, by promotion or in any other way, become entitled to a salary as large in the aggregate as they now receive or larger, should be adjusted in accordance with the above explanation.

4. This order is applicable to the three Presidencies.

INDIAN ARMY AMALGAMATION.

The following are extracts from the Royal Warrant dated Dec. 27, 1870—Part I. (Pay and Promotion), Section I.:

Amalgamation of British and Indian Establishments.

17. There shall be a list (a) of Indian general officers to which all Indian officers shall be promoted from the present Indian list, until all lieut. col. in our Indian staff corps who had attained that rank before Feb. 18, 1861, shall have succeeded to the rank of major general according to Indian regulations. The colonels of Indian royal artillery and royal engineers who held that rank before February 10, 1861, have already succeeded to the rank of major general. Major generals shall rise on this list until transferred under Article 25.

18. There shall also be three other lists, as follows:—

(b) A list of all colonels of British Cavalry, Guards, and Line, and of those colonels of Indian Staff Corps who had not attained the rank of lieutenant-col. before Feb. 18, 1861.

(c) A list of colonels and officers of lower rank of Royal (Indian) Artillery promoted on or after February 18, 1861.

(d) A list of colonels and officers of lower rank of Royal (Indian) Engineers promoted on or after February 18, 1861.

19. From (b) promotion shall be made direct to the British Establishment.

20. From (c) promotion shall be made to the establishment of general officers of Indian Artillery in Column 3, Article 3.

21. From (d) promotion shall be made to the establishment of general officers of Indian Engineers in Column 5, Article 3.

22. The general officers of Royal (Indian) Artillery who were transferred from List (A) as supernumerary to the establishment in Column 3, Article 3, shall be reduced by the absorption of every third vacancy.

23. When the junior officers on lists (c) and (d), respectively, shall have been promoted to the rank of major-general, as specified in Articles 20 and 21, the general officers of artillery and engineers, respectively, in Columns 3 and 5, Article 3, shall be incorporated with the general officers in Columns 2 and 4, Article 3, and thenceforward promotion from the Artillery and Engineers, respectively, shall be to such incorporated list.

24. When a vacancy shall occur on list (a) to which a colonel of the staff corps on list (b) would have succeeded had promotion to list (a) been continued, an addition of one shall be made to the Guards and Line establishments of general officers of the British army by the promotion to it of the senior qualified colonel of that branch on list (b), whether he be a British officer or an officer brought in from the staff corps. This shall continue until the number of general officers added to the British establishment, including the first transfer, shall be one for every twenty-eight combatant officers in the staff corps of the three Presidencies.

25. On the first addition being made under Article 24 the general officers of the staff corps on list (a) shall be transferred to the British establishment, which shall be increased by the same number as the Indian establishment will be diminished by such transfer.

26. Promotion into list (a) shall, after the transfer provided for in article 25, be limited to officers of cavalry and infantry of our late Indian army who shall not have joined our Indian staff corps.

27. As the number of general officers on the Guards and Line establishment of the British Army increases under the operation of Article 24, the establishment of generals, lieutenant generals, and major generals shall be from time to time so adjusted as to maintain as nearly as may be the proportions now existing in the British Service; but any reductions that may be requisite shall be made only by gradual absorption of every third vacancy amongst supernumeraries in the higher grades.

Indian Amalgamation.

39. When the first addition shall be made (under Article 24) on account of Indian Staff Corps to the British establishment of general officers, all the officers of the staff corps, including the general officers, shall be transferred, in the order of seniority, to the general seniority list of the British Army, and brevet promotion up to the rank of lieutenant colonel in succession to vacancies on the establishment of general officers shall be governed by such seniority.

REGULATIONS FOR THE PROMOTION OF INDIAN OFFICERS SO FAR AS RELATES TO RANK IN THE ARMY.

VICTORIA R.

Whereas it has been represented to Us that it is expedient to make further Regulations for governing the promotion in the Army of the Officers of Our Indian Forces, Our will and pleasure is that the Regulations annexed to this Our Royal Warrant be established, and be the sole Regulations under which the Promotion in the Army of such Officers shall be effected.

Given at Our Court at Windsor, this 21st day of December, 1871, in the Thirty-fifth Year of Our Reign. By her Majesty's Command, ARGLL.

1. Field Marshals shall be appointed at the will of the Sovereign, and the rank shall be conferred without reference to seniority.

2. The names of general officers shall be borne upon three separate lists. The first shall contain the names of those on the fixed establishment; the second, those who, having been promoted out of their regular turn, are supernumerary to the fixed establishment; and the third, those who have retired from the service with the honorary rank of general officers.

3. The fixed establishment of general officers shall be the following:—

Generals	33
Lieutenant generals	53
Major generals	87

4. Promotion on the establishment from the rank of lieutenant general to that of general, and from the rank of major general to that of lieutenant general, shall be made as vacancies occur, according to seniority, subject however to the provision laid down in the last paragraph of clause 11.

5. Every vacancy on the establishment of general officers shall be filled by the promotion of the senior colonel, subject to the provision in the last paragraph of clause 11, or by the transfer of a general officer from the supernumerary list as provided in clause 8.

6. Temporary rank and command as general, lieutenant general, or major general, may, for the convenience of our service, be conferred, without regard to seniority, on lieutenant generals, major generals, or colonels respectively; and if the officer during the continuance of such temporary rank and command shall have conducted himself to our satisfaction, the rank so held may, upon the recommendation of our Governor general in Council, be converted into permanent rank after having been held for five years in time of peace, or for any shorter period in the field during war. A colonel who shall vacate an appointment as temporary major general, and whose temporary rank shall not have been made permanent, may, upon the recommendation of our Governor general in Council, be made an honorary major-general, and shall retain that rank until he succeed to the establishment in virtue of his seniority on the list of colonels.

7. Promotion may be conferred upon a lieutenant general, major general, or colonel, without regard to seniority, for distinguished services in the field, and in such case the recommendation of our Governor general in Council, detailing the services for which the officer is promoted, shall be published in the general orders of our Indian military forces, and in the London Gazette.

8. An officer not below the rank of colonel, promoted after temporary service in a higher rank, or for distinguished service in the field, shall be borne as supernumerary, and shall not be placed on the establishment in his new rank until the time when he would have attained such rank by seniority; that is to say, when the surviving officer who stood next senior on the list to the officer promoted under clause 6 or 7, shall have attained the same rank on the establishment, the next vacancy shall be filled by the transfer of the supernumerary general officer to the establishment.

9. A supernumerary major general, who has been promoted after temporary service, and absorbed, under clause 8, into the establishment, shall have seniority according to the date of his permanent rank as major general, and shall rise to be lieutenant general and general, whether before or after his absorption into the establishment, in accordance with that seniority. A supernumerary general officer who has been promoted for distinguished service in the field, and absorbed under clause 8, shall take his seniority from the date of his promotion as published in the London Gazette.

10. The officers of the Staff Corps on the Indian List having been transferred to the general list of the British Army according to the regulations contained in clause 39 of our Royal Warrant of the 27th of December, 1870, their names shall be retained on the Indian List in italics, until their death or retirement, for the purpose of regulating the promotion of the officers below them on that list.

11. On the occurrence of a vacancy in the fixed number of general officers on the Indian List, specified in Clause 3 of this Warrant, whether among those who remain effective on that list, or among those whose names are merely retained in italics, and who shall be considered as forming part of the said fixed establishment, the name of the senior officer in each grade on the Indian List below that in which the vacancy may occur (with the exception of the grade of lieutenant colonel), shall be moved up to the next higher grade; but in the case of the officers whose names remain in italics, there shall be no actual promotion, the arrangement being limited to the transfer of the names for the purpose of regulating the promotion of those officers who remain effective on the Indian List; and the promotion of an effective colonel on the Indian List to the rank of major general shall in no case be affected by casualties among the general officers of the staff corps, until the number of general officers to be added to the British Establishment under Clause 24 of our said Royal Warrant of December 27, 1870, shall be complete.

12. The rank of brigadier general shall be local or temporary only.

13. A lieutenant colonel may attain the rank of colonel—

- (a.) By regimental seniority in the case of officers on the Indian List of cavalry and infantry whose substantive commissions, as lieutenant-colonel, are dated prior to the 1st of January, 1862;
- (b.) By twelve years' service in the substantive grade of lieutenant colonel;
- (c.) By brevet, after five years' satisfactory service in a staff situation in India, with the substantive rank of lieutenant colonel;

(h.) By brevet, after eight years' satisfactory service, as a substantive lieutenant colonel or substantive major, with the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel, in a civil situation under Government; provided the appointment be of a nature considered by our Governor general in Council and Commander-in-Chief in India to be calculated to afford the officer such practical experience as may afterwards prove advantageous to the corps or service to which he belongs.

(i.) By brevet, after eight years' service, with the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel conferred for distinguished service in the field.

14. A substantive major, with the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel, who shall fall into temporary command of a regiment for a continuous period exceeding one calendar month, shall reckon such continuous period as part of the five years required to qualify for the rank of colonel.

15. When a regiment shall be so divided as to constitute two distinct commands, and one portion shall be under the command of a substantive major, who is also a brevet lieutenant colonel; or when he shall draw the command pay of such command for any period in consequence of the death or removal of the commanding officer, or when a brevet lieutenant colonel (irrespective of his substantive rank) shall be in command of a mixed force of at least 400 men of different corps in the field for a consecutive period of not less than one calendar month, such service, or portions of such service, shall be allowed to reckon as part of the period required to qualify for the rank of colonel, subject to the approval of our Commander in Chief in India and Governor general of India in Council.

16. No period of acting staff service shall reckon towards the rank of colonel, unless it be converted into actual staff service by subsequent confirmation.

17. A major may attain the rank of lieutenant colonel—

- (a.) By regimental seniority;
- (b.) By twenty-six years' service in the army in the case of officers whose appointment to our Indian forces was made subject to the conditions prescribed in the General Order of our Governor general of India in Council, dated the 9th of December, 1859, No. 1,637;
- (c.) By brevet, after twenty-six years' service in the army, so long as there remain any majors on the list of cavalry and infantry in our Indian forces;

THE INDIAN ARMY DEFENCE INSTITUTION.

The following Circular has been issued by the Committee of the Indian Army Defence Institution :—

The Indian Army Defence Institution has been organised, with reference to the increasing grievances of which numerous officers of the late East India Company's Service complain, in order to secure, by every legitimate resource, the pecuniary and other benefits which were guaranteed by the Legislature to the whole of the Company's officers, by the Act for the Better Government of India, 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106, which was passed when the local army was placed under the sole authority of the Crown.

By the 56th section of that statute, which was subsequently ratified by a later enactment—23 and 24 Vict. cap. 100—commonly called "the Henley Clause," it is provided, that "The military and naval forces of the East India Company . . . shall be entitled to the like pay, pensions, allowances, and privileges, and the like advantages as regards promotion and otherwise, as if they had continued in the service of the said Company."

Successive Governments have reiterated the most solemn and positive assurances that the guarantees of the Imperial Parliament would be punctiliously respected. Nevertheless they appear to have been set at naught by various measures, prejudicial to the interests of Indian officers, which either have been effected, or are in process of execution by the public departments. Among these may be enumerated the refusal of a fair and reasonable compensation to the numerous officers who, having paid the normal bonus to their seniors on retirement, are now precluded from receiving in their turn the bonus which, under the Company's regime, they were entitled to expect, and which in fact they considered as safely insured to them under the sanction of their Government as any ordinary tontine assurance on which a premium has been paid.

In addition to this may be named the threatened action, under high official influence, which aims at enforcing compulsory retirement on officers who have spent their best years in Indian service, and who cannot afford, especially if deprived of the bonus, which they always hoped to obtain, to live on a small pension in England.

The Indian Army Defence Institution has nominated, in a general meeting, a competent committee to take into serious consideration these and all other measures of a similar class, which appear to be in violation of the Imperial guarantee contained in the statute above quoted, ensuring to all Indian officers every advantage with respect to promotion, and every pecuniary emolument which they would have enjoyed under the sway of the East India Company.

The committee propose to take into their consideration all valid and legitimate grievances of this character which officers who served under the late East India Company may bring to their notice, in order to use all lawful means to urge them on the attention of the State authorities, and, if necessary, by a motion for an address to the Crown, or by the introduction of a Bill in Parliament, to such redress at the hands of the Legislature. A form or scheme of petition suitable to each particular class of grievance is in course of preparation, and will be forwarded as early as possible, in case some aid or suggestion of this nature should be desired. Officers are generally invited to assist the committee in these objects by supplying information with respect to Indian officers' grievances, to the president of the Indian Army Defence Committee, care of Messrs. Henry S. King and Co., 45, Pall-mall, London.

And as it is obvious that funds are necessary to enable this committee to act with vigour and success, officers are also requested to contribute, either according to their rank, on a scale which will be suggested for their guidance, or according to their inclination and ability.

Messrs. Henry S. King and Co., of 45, Pall-mall, London; and their agents, Messrs. King, Hamilton, and Co., at Calcutta; Messrs. King, King, and Co., at Bombay; and Messrs. Parry and Co., at Madras, will kindly receive donations and subscriptions on behalf of this Committee.

PETITION REGARDING BONUS CLAIMS.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The petition of hereby sheweth

1. "That your petitioner entered the military service of the late Honourable East India Company in 18—

2. "That at that time the system called the Bonus System was in operation, by which each officer on retirement received a sum of money from his junior, he having previously, in the various subordinate steps of rank he had filled, contributed in like manner to the payment of like sums for his seniors on their retirement.

3. "That this system was carried on for many years with the fullest recognition by and sanction of the authorities, as is shown by General Order, Governor General, 2 May, 1838, publishing to the Army in India the sanction of the aforesaid practice, given by the Court of Directors of the Honourable East India Company in their letter No. 7, of 1837, dated 29th November of that year.

4. "That this practice prevailed over the whole branch of the army to which your petitioner belonged, until by the amalgamation of the Honourable East India Company's and her Majesty's armies in 1858 it came to an end, in consequence of the new system of promotion then introduced, and your petitioner is deprived of his bonus, for which on the Tontine System he had subscribed from the

5. "That by a clause in Act 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106, repeated in Act 23 and 24 Vict., c. 100, commonly called the Henley Clause, the pay, pensions, allowances, and privileges previously enjoyed by the officers of the Honourable East India Company's army were guaranteed to them.

6. "That your petitioner stood, and stands exactly in the same position as the officers of the regiment mentioned in Clause 4, 'Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871,' that is to say, the 19th, 20th, and 21st Regiments of Cavalry, and the regiments of Infantry numbered from 100 to 109, both inclusive, who are by that clause declared entitled to receive compensation on retirement equal to the sums they would have received, according to the custom of their regiments, from the junior officers of those regiments, had they retired therefrom prior to the day the said Act comes or came into force."

7. "That your petitioner, in common with his brother officers, has been for nine years endeavouring to get his claims to compensation under this head, and on the principle recognised in Clause 4, 'Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871,' admitted, but without success. [Officers who have not already petitioned should substitute the following for the words in italics in para. 7:—"That many of the brother officers of your petitioner have been," &c., &c."]

8. "That these claims were first rejected on the ground that the Bonus System was illegal; that that ground was abandoned as untenable, for it has been shown that the practice, so far from being illegal, had been fully sanctioned by the Government, and was, moreover, approved by the Government as being the means of preventing stagnation of promotion in the Indian Army; and now that compensation has been awarded to the officers of the Royal Army for the payment of over-regulation prices, which were paid in direct violation of a very stringent law, your petitioner humbly prays that his claim which through the Indian purchase system having twice received official sanction, stands, he most respectfully submits, on much stronger ground, may be no longer ignored. That the justice of your petitioner's claims to compensation was admitted on principle by your Honourable House in May, 1865, when a humble address was voted to her Majesty, praying that she would be graciously pleased to redress grievances complained of by the officers of the Indian Army, such grievances being those of which your petitioner now complains, and the justice of your petitioner's claims was further admitted on principle by Lord Cranborne's despatch, dated August 18th, 1866; and again in June, 1870, when in answer to petitions against the provisions of that despatch, your Honourable House again voted a humble address to her Majesty, which resulted in replies from the Government of Madras and Bombay favourable to the claims of the officers, notwithstanding, the grievance remains unredressed; and that, finally, your petitioner bases the grounds of his claims upon their identity with those referred to in the preceding 6th paragraph, which have, as therein stated, been admitted and settled."

Wherefore your petitioner prays:—

"That your honourable House would present a humble address to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to redress your petitioner's grievance on the principle admitted in Clause 4 of the 'Regulation of the Forces Act, 1871.'"

And your petitioner will ever pray.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Friday, at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street; Mr. R. W. Crawford, M.P., in the chair.

The report, an abstract of which has already appeared, was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said he thought they would consider it satisfactory. They had nearly completed all their works, and there remained only a few small works to finish their undertaking. There had been a falling off in the traffic receipts, but it would not interfere with their guaranteed dividend or the division of the surplus beyond that amount, upon which he might congratulate them. The Chord line was now practically finished, some works remain to be completed, and they had no more large works on hand, but, at the same time, in concluding the works they had to part with many gentlemen who had served the company with great ability and energy, and he hoped they would obtain adequate professional employment elsewhere. They had seen the letter from the Government as to the substantial state of the company's works. The last season was acknowledged to be the most remarkable, having the greatest rainfall, with the exception of some of the western parts of India, that had occurred for many years. There had been extensive inundations over a vast extent of territory, and great damage had been caused by the floods to other company's railway works, but he was glad to say they had nothing to lay out on the company's works for any damage whatever, and had entirely escaped from any expense on that account. They had no doubt seen by the returns the falling off in the traffic from week to week, and perhaps imagined all sorts of things as to its effect on their receipts. He thought it would not be difficult to show that the falling off was only temporary, and not of a permanent nature. There were three items especially affected in the past half-year, the grain, seeds, and the coal traffic. In the corresponding half of 1870 there was a famine in the upper part of India from want of rain. The company had carried a large supply of grain, &c., to those places, and the receipts had been proportionately enlarged. Then, with reference to coal traffic, there were circumstances connected with that trade. The steamers brought out coal enough with them to take them through the Suez Canal to Calcutta and back to Malta, so the company had but little demand for their coals at Calcutta. As business was slack the linseed and other seeds were not in brisk demand at Calcutta, and the merchants took their own time, forwarding the seeds in steamers and native boats at a cheaper rate than by railway. But if there had been a brisk market they would have been sent by the railway to Calcutta. The Government had appointed a committee to inquire into the circumstances of the trade affecting the railway, and the whole had been satisfactorily explained, and the facts were traced out. They had carried a quantity of cotton, 28,428 tons, against 12,141 tons in the corresponding period, showing an increase of 16,277 tons. There had been an increase in the quantity of some articles, and a decrease in others. They had carried several tons of goods less than in the corresponding period, and had received £181,858 less for passengers and merchandise than in the corresponding period. The expenses had been reduced by the judgment and zeal exercised by their officers, also in consequence of the operation of the Chord line, and they had already derived very great advantage from it. In making the Chord line they had avoided the necessity of doubling 250 miles of the main line from one point of junction to the other at Luckiesera, which would have cost £1,000,000. The Chord line was estimated to cost £2,400,000, had already cost £2,050,000, and it was possible when they balanced accounts it would stand them in £1,200,000, or say about £60,000 a year. They had already derived an ample justification for the expenditure on that line, in the reduction of their expenses in fuel. They had reduced the train mileage by 817,000 miles as compared with the preceding year. They could not have accomplished the great economy of expenditure were it not for the Chord line. They had saved £27,908 in the cost of coal alone. They had also saved by arrangements with their engine drivers and their stokers. Their officers had most successfully utilised the Chord line, which he could prove to the satisfaction of the meeting. (Hear, hear). The interchange of traffic by means of the Jubbulpore line with the Great Indian Peninsular Railway would become of considerable importance.

Mr. Beaumont, a director, seconded the motion for the adoption of the report.

Mr. Wilson said he did not agree with the chairman as to the Chord line, he thought they would have been better without it. He could not see the advantage of that line, as it reduced their receipts by shortening the distance to the North-West Provinces.

Mr. J. Jones said they should have had some information respecting the local traffic, and as to what had been done in the making of roads to the stations. He considered that the Suez Canal had greatly facilitated the trade with India, and that it must eventually benefit the railways.

The Chairman, in reply to questions, stated that the expenditure on the main line was £27,000,000, and, including the Jubbulpore line, £30,568,000. If the company had agreed to the proposition of the Government at the last meeting the capital of the two lines would have been amalgamated, and the net earnings would have been at the rate of £4. 18s. per cent. on the whole capital, the Government having to make up the difference; but the shareholders did not agree to it, and therefore had now the 4s. 4d. per cent in addition to the guaranteed interest.

The report was then unanimously adopted.

It was agreed that all shares upon which the full amount had been paid up should be converted into stock of the company, and that a dividend of 4s. 4d. per cent. be declared and paid in addition to the guaranteed interest.

The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

Miscellaneous.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £500,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 3rd inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £485,800; and to Bombay, £14,200. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 11 per cent., those above in full. Average rate on Calcutta, 1s. 11¾d.; and on Bombay, 1s. 11½d.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH has sent for public exhibition, in the South Kensington Museum, specimens of the collections of objects of science and art which he made in his cruise round the world in her Majesty's ship Galatea, in the years 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, and 1871. They will be illustrated by paintings of the scenes of places touched at by Mr. Oswald Brierly and Mr. Nicholas Chevalier. It is expected that they will be arranged for public inspection in the North Court of the Museum towards the end of January.

NEW SIGNAL LIGHT FOR INDIA.—A new description of signal light, called the "Star Shell," has been recently approved by the War Office authorities for use in India. It consists of an iron carcass, fitted with three steel studs to fit the rifling of the 7-pounder or mountain gun, when it is filled. After attaining the requisite elevation the cap of the shell flies off, and fourteen lights are thrown into the air. By adopting a code, where certain words are represented by different colours, a complete system of communication might be kept up between two bodies of troops at a considerable distance from each other.

AUDITOR OF INDIAN ACCOUNTS.—We understand that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has insisted upon his right to nominate a successor to the late Major-general Sir G. I. Jameson, Auditor of Indian Accounts, and that a Treasury clerk will receive this lucrative appointment in spite of the nomination thereto of a well-known Indian officer which had been made by the Duke of Argyll.—Broad Arrow.—We hear it rumoured that General Hanyngton is not to have the Indian Auditorship, for which he had been designated. The post, it is said, will be given to Mr. Blackwood, of the Treasury.—Civil Service Gazette.

OFFICERS' DRESS.—Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of pantaloons and high boots being substituted for the present booted overalls and Wellingtons worn by staff officers and mounted corps. The high boot is to be worn for those duties on which the booted overalls have hitherto been used, and on all other occasions trousers will be the regulation dress. Officers will not be required to make this change until the overalls now in their possession are worn out. When the new boot is on, the upper edge should be one inch below the knee-cap, and sloped off to the rear, so as not to interfere with the bend of the knee. A pattern boot has been sent to each regiment, and a sample pair for officers may be inspected at the Horse Guards, War Office, where also new pattern spurs may be seen.

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.—The list of business before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has just been issued. It contains sixty-two appeals, one patent case, and the five cases already heard which stand over for judgment. Among these last is the case of the Vicar of Frome, "Sheppard v. Bennett," for which, however, as in the other cases, no day has yet been named. Of the Indian appeals there are thirty-six from the province of Bengal, and eight appeals from the Court of Admiralty, which last-mentioned appeals are appointed to be commenced on the 1st of February. The sittings will be opened next week with an application for a prolongation of a patent. The committee have not as yet appointed days for giving judgment in the five cases, including the appeal of General Forester as to the property of the late Dyce Sombre.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.—The Madras Irrigation and Canal Company have invited subscriptions for £800,000 additional capital, in 80,000 shares of £10 each. The amount is payable by instalments during the next five years, and interest will be paid half-yearly on each instalment, until the realisation of profits equal to that per centage. The prospectus calls attention to the progress already made—190 miles of main canal and 400 miles of minor canals—and also to the beneficial as well as lucrative character of the undertaking, a large demand for the water being now reported. The present capital is wanted to form reservoirs for the storage of the surplus flood waters of the river Toombuddra, to provide steam and other vessels, landing stages, &c., and to construct two miles and a half of railway, to connect the Canal with the Madras line near Cuddapah.

THE ALBERT ARBITRATION.—Lord Cairns has delivered judgment at the Arbitration-rooms, Waterloo-place, in a very important case affecting annuitants receiving an income from companies which had been amalgamated with the Albert. The case was that of a person named Dale, who, it appeared, was a domestic servant, who claimed against the Metropolitan Counties Society upon five annuity contracts. It appeared that the contracts were issued to Mr. Dale by the St. George's Company, which amalgamated with the Metropolitan Counties in October, 1861. This latter also amalgamated with the Western in August, 1862, and a further amalgamation took place with the Albert in June, 1865. The claimant having accepted by endorsement the liability of the Metropolitan Company instead of the St. George's, the annuity deeds were sent to him with a manuscript endorsement of the Albert, signed by three directors of that company. Lord Cairns, in delivering judgment, said that the question of liability lay between the Metropolitan and the Albert. Taking into consideration the endorsement, the first thing that struck him was that beyond all doubt it made the capital stocks of the Albert liable, but there was nothing whatever that stated that the funds of the Albert were to be liable by way of additional security as distinguished from a substituted security. His Lordship then read some documents, which he said convinced him that although Dale was in humble life and could not be expected to understand clearly the bearing of legal matters, still he seemed to have had a just appreciation of a transaction of that kind. He was informed that the Albert had become liable, and he sent in his documents for endorsement. There was a circular issued which informed him that the capital of the new company, or the united companies, whichever it might be called, was that to which the persons insured, either by way of policy or annuity, were for the future to look; and he (Lord Cairns) did not think he was at liberty, having been distinctly told that this was the footing on which it was proposed that future payments should be made to him—after the acknowledgment of the liability of an entirely different capital and fund for the payment of the annuities—afterwards to turn round and say he never entered into any contract or engagement to relinquish the security of the original company insuring his annuity, and that he had not accepted the security of the new company. In that case, therefore, although the principles laid down in Potts were no doubt fully recognised, he thought the case was altogether different, and that there was a deliberate acceptance of the liability of the Albert, and a pledge by the directors of the assets of the Albert in substitution of the liability of the Metropolitan Counties. Judgment accordingly.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has for some time past been engaged in the construction in the Madras Presidency, of a Canal of great capacity, for the purposes of irrigation and navigation, with subsidiary channels. It has now completed 190 miles of the main Canal, extending from the River Toombudra, at a point about eighteen miles above the town of Kurnool, passing that town and proceeding through the extremely fertile valley of the Koon-dair to (or near to) the town of Cuddapah, and also of nearly 400 miles of the minor Canals.

The main Canal is designed to convey 400,000 cubic yards of water per hour, which will be sufficient to irrigate immediately 266,000 acres of land, and ultimately, it is estimated, 400,000 acres, and during the past season (the first after completion) water has been flowing regularly through it without interruption.

The charge for the water supplied by the Company for irrigation has been sanctioned by the Government, at six rupees, or 12s. per acre per crop, and when the smaller area stated is irrigated, which there is no doubt will be the case as rapidly as the ryots (cultivators) can make their arrangements for wet cultivation, the return from this source, limited as it is at present to six months, also calculating one crop only as receiving water, and without taking into account the revenue from navigation, will be £150,000.

Although during the past season it was known in the localities that water could be taken from the River Toombudra (the source of supply) during six months only of the year, and that the Company were not possessed of the means of carrying on navigation, the revenue earned has exceeded that previously estimated, and it is reported by the conservancy staff, that, as a considerable portion of the area of land commanded by the Canals is now being prepared for wet cultivation, during the present year, a large and rapidly expanding demand for the Company's water will take place.

To obtain still more beneficial results both for the present proprietors of capital, and for those who may subscribe for that now issued, by developing to their full extent the productive capabilities of the works constructed, there is wanting—

1. The formation of reservoirs for the storage of the surplus flood waters of the Toombudra sufficient to afford irrigation and navigation for twelve in lieu of six months.
2. The provision of steam and other vessels for the carriage of passengers, merchandise, and agricultural produce, including the surplus products of the land irrigated, and wharves and landing stages at convenient points of the Canal.
3. The construction of a railway (in length about two-and-a-half miles) to connect the Canal with the Madras Railway near to Cuddapah, so as to give, by arrangement with the latter Company, a continuous line of transport to the important Presidential Town and Port of Madras.

It is an advantage of some importance that sites for reservoirs have been already sought for and investigated, and that plans and estimates of the most eligible of those discovered have been placed before the Government of Madras for approval, because the great delay which these preliminary operations naturally involve has thus been obviated.

With a due regard to a vigorous prosecution of the requisite storage works, the Directors have been able to fix the payment of Capital by very easy instalments, both as to amount and time.

The Chief Engineer of the Company, who from his local knowledge and past experience is well fitted to pass an accurate judgment in the matter, has lately given much attention to the question of returns, and he considers that a net revenue of at least 25 per cent. upon the Company's past and intended outlay may be ultimately expected, irrespective of the additional gain which will be produced by—

1. The continuation of transport from Cuddapah to Madras.
2. Leasing or otherwise utilising the enormous water power, which the Company's Canals possess, for the working of cotton, corn, oil, and other mills.

3. The supply of water to towns in the locality of the Canal (an agreement for that purpose with the town authorities of Kurnool having been for some time past in actual operation, and the municipality of Cuddapah having intimated their desire to enter into a like agreement); and

4. The cultivation of timber of various kinds along the sides and embankments of the Canals, and its sale for firewood, manure, and other purposes.

Authority being given to the Company, by its Acts of Incorporation, and by its Contracts with the Secretary of State for India, to raise the present additional Capital without a guarantee of interest from Government, provision has been made under the same Acts of Parliament for the payment of interest at 5 per cent. upon each Call as paid up, until the net returns from the works themselves shall be equal to that percentage, and as the receipt of revenue has already commenced satisfactorily, a comparatively small sum will, it is calculated, be sufficient to cover this provision.

By the Acts and Contracts above referred to the appropriation of profits from irrigation; the division of the surplus thereof between the Government and the Company, after the payment of 12 per cent. to the latter; as also the exclusive right of the Company to the returns derived from navigating their Canals, are fully provided for. The original Contract and Copies of the Acts of Incorporation are open for inspection at the Offices of the Company.

Every inquiry from those who are desirous of subscribing towards the present issue of Capital is invited, and the Secretary will afford to all the fullest information.

Forms of Application for Shares may now be had at the Company's Offices, 8 and 9, Queen-street-place, Southwark-bridge, London, E.C.; but no application will be considered unless a deposit of £1 on each Share applied for shall have been made either to the Bankers of the Company—Messrs. RAMSON, BOUVIER, and Co.,
No. 1, Pall-mall East, London, S.W.—or at the Offices of the Company. The deposit will be returned without deduction if the application is not acceded to.

The Directors reserve to themselves the right of determining whether the number of Shares applied for will be sufficient, and of expending the Capital raised, whatever may be its amount, or of returning deposits to the subscribers.

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA:

ORIGINALLY PREPARED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, AND REPRODUCED AT THE INDIA MUSEUM
BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

EDITED BY

J. FORBES WATSON AND JOHN WILLIAM KAYE.

MEMORANDUM.

In addition to the copies of this work prepared for the use of the Government, the Secretary of State for India in Council has authorised the publication of an edition for sale.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

THE OPTOSCOPE.

The practical utility of the OPTOSCOPE is now fully determined. In numerous cases has its merits been displayed in a manner so satisfactory, that in no instance has it afforded less satisfaction to the intelligent inquirer than to the inventor himself. It has long been a matter of considerable importance to those suffering from defective vision to learn the exact state of the refractive humours of the eye, and the proper convexity or concavity of the glasses required to render the vision as perfect as the state of the organs will admit of.

is all that can be desired for this purpose, and those desirous of benefiting by his discovery may be suited with the most perfect-fitting glasses at moderate cost.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Dec. 23; Agra and Madras, Dec. 21; Calcutta, Dec. 20. Thanks to the Mont Cenis Tunnel, the mails were received in London on Saturday morning, more than a day earlier than if they had travelled by the Brenner route.

THE Art Show in the new Dalhousie Hall at Calcutta was opened by Lord Mayo in a brief but pleasant and pertinent speech. Glancing at the chronic dislike of Calcutta to government in the Hills, he thought it possible that something good might come even from Simlah, since the example set there had now been followed in Calcutta. After the usual commonplaces about the social and mental gain derivable from such exhibitions, he turned to the wider aspects of the subject, dwelling on the influence of Indian art in Europe, as evinced by "the growing passion for Indian things," and advising the native Indians to profit in their turn by the art work of Europe. Some of those who last year observed the marked difference at South Kensington between the marvels of genuine Indian art and the samples copied from English patterns may be inclined to smile at the advice. But perhaps in presence of an audience partly English it was thought politic to assume that in art, as in other matters, India has much to learn from Europe. Perhaps, too, in speaking of Europe his Lordship meant Italy rather than France or England. The Exhibition seems to be very popular with the Calcutta folk.

THE Delhi Camp of Exercise was fast filling when the mail left Bombay. On the 16th December the 4th Hussars, from Meerut, marched into the camp of the 3rd Division at Madhupore, while the 11th Hussars, from Muttra, took up their place in the Old Cantonments outside Delhi. A day or two earlier the 12th Cavalry, the 5th Fusiliers, and the D battery 16th brigade R.A., came into camp, some of them from stations on the Beyas. On the 17th the 65th Foot, from Agra, 800 strong, marched into the camp of the 1st Division. The 1st Ghoorkas, from the Punjab, and the 32nd Pioneers, from Ranikhet, also reached their ground on the same day. Altogether, in the space of five or six days, some 14,000 men, with 4,000 horses and 36 guns, had been moved into one or another of the camps round Delhi "without a hitch or mistake of any kind," if we may trust a writer in the Pioneer. All symptoms of cholera are said to have disappeared. The weather had set in very cold, but the sun's heat for some hours of the day was still so powerful that the thermometer sometimes rose to 80 deg.

DR. FAREBROTHER's searching Report on the recent outbreak of cholera at Delhi, which so nearly upset Lord Napier's scheme for a series of grand cold-weather manœuvres, has called forth from Mr. Davies, the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab, a sharp rebuke of the Municipal Commissioners, to whose remissness the outbreak was apparently due. As the head of the Municipality is an English Civil-officer, whose energy and influence are supposed to guide and spur his apathetic native colleagues, this looks as if Mr. Davies's censure had been specially levelled at the Commissioner of Delhi. It is certainly discouraging to be told that, before the invention of municipal government in India, the kind of nuisance committed by the Chumars or tanners of Delhi would never have been allowed to exist.

THE improvement reported in the health of the Prince of Wales had caused no little joy among all classes of people in India. The drawing-room which had been postponed on account of the Prince's illness came off at last on the evening of the 19th December.

ATTEMPTS have lately been making in some parts of India to preserve small game under legal sanctions. A similar attempt at preserving large game for a very different purpose is announced in one of the Madras papers. Sportsmen who aim at something higher than the shooting of snipe, deer, or even bison, will perhaps be grieved to hear that the increasing slaughter of wild elephants has driven the Government of Madras to devise a Bill for the repression of a practice which might end in time with the extinction of the elephant himself. In his Minute on the subject Lord Napier, the Governor, pleads the absolute necessity of a law for "the preservation of an animal so useful for the purposes of labour, and so indispensable in India to military operations." As a simple question of public policy, he would step in to prevent an issue which might else "be attained at no distant date in the forests and mountain ranges" of the Madras Presidency. A Bill in furtherance of his Lordship's views was to be laid before his Legislative Council at an early date. Let us hope that when the Bill goes up for Lord Mayo's final approval, he will cheerfully agree to sink the sportsman in the statesman.

MR. S. C. BAYLEY, who was recently acting as Secretary to the Bengal Government, has been appointed to act as Commissioner of Chittagong during the absence of Lord Ulick Browne on furlough. The latter officer has been named by some of the Calcutta papers as the likeliest candidate for the new post of Chief Commissioner in Assam; and, to judge from his past services in the wilder districts of Eastern Bengal, his friends have good reason to hope for his success. Another deserving name is that of Colonel Hopkinson. We observe that Lieutenant-colonel J. E. Cracroft has been appointed to officiate as Commissioner of the Delhi Division, in the room of Mr. J. W. Macnabb, who has gone on leave. Has this arrangement any connection with the censure passed by Mr. Davies on the Municipality of Delhi on account of the recent cholera outbreak? Major Fenton, Deputy Commissioner of Nagpore, is to officiate for Major Cumberlege as Commissioner of Chattisghur in the Central Provinces.

GENERAL CHAMBERLAIN'S Committee on the state of the Sagar Barracks have finished their enquiries and sent in their report. These splendid buildings, which were completed only about three years ago at a cost of some fifteen lakhs of rupees (£150,000) have become so dangerous as to be entirely deserted, and kept from falling only by props on every side. The Committee, according to the Bombay Gazette, agree in the main with Mr. Fitzjames, the executive engineer who first revealed the unsafe condition of the barracks in question, and with the different station committees which had afterwards examined them. One part of the barracks is to come down altogether, while the rest will be patched up and strengthened as far as they can be. It was expected that Captain Faber, under whose charge the buildings were erected, would have come in for a large share of blame; but so far as is yet known, the Committee have found many points in his favour; among others, the absolute impossibility of one executive officer being equal to all the work demanded of him. Captain Faber for instance had to deal with ten sets of plans and estimates at the same time, and the Chief Engineer of the Central Provinces has to look after all the engineering work of a Province nearly as large as Great Britain. We cannot therefore be surprised to hear that the Committee have acknowledged the need of extensive reforms in the administration of the Public Works Department.

LETTERS and field telegrams from the Loshai Expedition bring down the detailed accounts of its movements to the 17th December. By that date the whole of the Left Column, under General Bouchier, had pushed its way to Tipai Mukh on the Barak river, some seventy or eighty miles south-eastward from Lakhimpore. Two days earlier the foreposts of the Right Column under General Brownlow, in their advance from Chittagong, had gained a commanding position on the crest of the Rai Jan Klang range of hills, about forty miles north of Rattan Poya's country. Only the day before a small reconnoitring party of Ghoorkas, under Colonel Macpherson, surprised the village of a Syloo chief named Vanoonah, killing or wounding several of the enemy, with no loss of life on its own side. Before they fled, the enemy, who had refused all peaceful overtures and fired on our troops, set the village itself on fire. On the 1st December one of General Nuthall's working parties was attacked between Tsiklapi and Tseboo, somewhere on the Manipore frontier, by a pretty strong body of Loshais. His brave Munipoories however, numbering only thirty-five men, beat them back with a loss of twelve Loshais killed, bringing in as trophies five Loshai heads and as many muskets, one of which bore the Tower mark. One subadar of the Manipore Contingent was slain. Owing to the hilly nature of the country, and the need of clearing every inch of the road through pathless jungle, the marching appears to be very slow. It took about three weeks to cut a road of twenty-five miles or so from Mainadhar to Tipai Mukh, and it seems doubtful whether it was fit for laden elephants even then. The last five or six miles appear, from the General's report, to have been the most difficult. A "terrible country" indeed it must be if it answers to the description given by an officer writing from Mainadhar:—

An endless succession of steep muddy tilas or hillocks, averaging from one to eight hundred feet in height, clad from base to summit in impenetrable bamboo jungle or equally difficult forest, a tangle of matted underwood and creepers, separated at their bases by belts of thorny cane-brake and deep ravines with treacherous muddy bottoms—such are the principal features of the country.

Picturesque and shady it certainly is, seeing that for hours together the path winds in deep gloom through an arch of green bamboos, relieved here and there by green forest trees covered with ferns and orchids, or through groves of wild plantains and fan-shaped palms. The utter stillness is broken only by the distant bark of the khakur, or the plaintive concert of black monkeys which rove unseen about the forest. Prettier also to read than to realise is the account given by another correspondent of his marches from Kassalong to Demagiri, up and down steep hills of slippery mud, and through a stream of water varying from two inches to three feet deep; the latter amusement being sometimes continued for many hours together. It is a beautiful hunting-ground for the botanist or the connoisseur in butterflies; but up to ten o'clock the landscapes are hidden by dense fogs, and when these have cleared up, the gloom overhead remains unbroken save by the rarest possible glimpses of sunshine. Your eyes moreover are fully employed in helping you to pick a way over the frequent rocks and boulders, and to avoid sudden plunges into mud and water all alive with leeches and other crawling things. In the day time the heat is still considerable, while the heavy dews intensify the cold at night. No wonder that fevers and other complaints have been rife among the Goorkhas and other native troops employed in clearing the jungle.

On the 16th December General Bouchier marched about four miles south-eastward from Tipai Mukh. Next day he moved on three miles further with two hundred of the 44th N.I. and a company of Sappers. A hundred of the 22nd N.I. were to leave Tipai Mukh on the 18th. That place was being fortified, and plenty of commissariat stores were being brought thither by water. Tipai Mukh lies at the junction of the Tipai and Barak rivers, about fifty miles south of Monierkhal, where Winchester was slain and his little girl carried off by Loshai raiders a year ago. The two columns were about eighty miles apart in the middle of December, when they began bearing towards each other.

THE latest telegraphic news from the Loshai country reports the continued advance of our troops. No further fighting appears to have taken place up to the 7th January. General Brownlow's or the Right Column encamped at Savoonga on the 3rd, and a Syloo Chief had sent in a message asking for peace. Nothing however came of this, and the Chief fired his village on the General's subsequent advance. On the 4th General Bouchier's column had marched seven miles further eastward, through a country where the hills were very steep and water scarce. He seems to have kept on advancing up to the 7th, but instead of fighting, the Loshais were anxious only to treat. Numbers of them were coming into his camp with fowls and vegetables which they offered in exchange for salt. They are described as being civil and quiet, with less of the savage in them than was expected. Even savages however are presumably alive to their own interests, and the story of the poultry bears a curious resemblance to the issue of a Loshai campaign two years ago under General Nuthall. Is the present campaign to have the same futile ending? Absit omen; but we must wait and see.

ACCORDING to a Calcutta telegram of the 10th January Lord Mayo arrived in the Delhi Camp on the morning of the 8th. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, the Commander-in-Chief, the Maharajah of Gwalior, and several other native princes turned out to meet him. There was a parade, we are told, of fifteen hundred troops—not a large number under the circumstances—who "presented a fine appearance," telegraphic English for looking well. A field-day under Sir H. Tombs was followed by a levée and a ball. The military manoeuvres were to be continued daily.

FROM the latest telegrams we also learn that the Bank of Bengal has declared a dividend for the half-year at the rate of three per cent.

It appears from Mr. Rivett-Carnac's last report that the acreage under cotton in the Central Provinces has fallen off in the past year by about 70,000 acres. In East Berar the crops are unequal, and in spite of an increased culture of 30,000 acres, it is feared that the outturn will not make up for the effects of bad weather. In West Berar the cotton acreage has decreased by 100,000 acres, and the rainfall was only half the usual quantity. Altogether the falling-off in the Central Provinces ranges from 20 to 25 per cent., and the whole outturn for the season is reckoned at only 210,000 bales.

THE Madras Government have pledged their support to certain schemes of railway extension. These include the continuation of the Carnatic Line from Cuddalore to Tanjore or some other point on the Southern of India Railway, the construction of a branch on the latter line from Dindigul to Coimbatore, the construction of one State line from Cannanore to Beypore, of another from Puttamby to Cochin through the territory of Cochin and Travancore, and of a third State line from Bellary to the Bombay frontier. Besides these there are the proposed branch line to the Neilgherries, the extension of the G.S.I. Railway to Tuticorin, of the Carnatic Railway to Cuddalore, and short branches connecting stations on the South-Western line with neighbouring large towns. In recommending these schemes to the Central Government, that of Madras takes credit for meeting the requirements of trade and the public convenience by a plan which promises to develop a more and more paying traffic on the lines concerned.

A Times telegram of January 14 announces the arrival of the King of Siam at Calcutta the day before. His Majesty was afterwards welcomed by Lord Mayo in a brilliant Durbar. His arrival was to be the prelude to a week of festivities.

THE Loshai or Kookie tribes, whose country we are once more invading, spread in pretty large numbers northward from the neighbourhood of the Chittagong Hill Tracts to the borders of Cachar on the west and of Burmah on the east. They call themselves Loshai or Lhoosai, a name curiously resembling that of Lhotsa, by which the people of Bhotan style themselves. To the Bengallies they are known as Kookies, and to the Burmese as Lankhé. The tribes nearest the Indian frontier are the Howlong, Sylloo, and Rattan Poya. Of these, the actual numbers may amount in all to about 30,000, the Howlong tribe being apparently the most numerous. Their language, according to Captain Lewin, closely resembles some of the dialects spoken in Hill Tipperah, and along the Manipore frontier. It comes, no doubt, from the same stock as the Tibetan and Burmese. The Loshai men average 5ft. 8in. high, and the women 5ft. 4in. They have swarthy complexions, generally smooth cheeks, and lean bodies. Their only garment is a strip of thick blue cloth round the women's loins, and a long sheet or mantle of homespun cotton, coloured in blue, yellow, and red stripes, for the men. The hair is bound into a knot on the nape of the neck. The women wear huge discs of wood or ivory pendant from their ears. Both sexes are very fond of amber, which is worn as a necklace in large long beads. Their villages, always placed on the top of a high hill, and stockaded in war time, are abandoned every five years or so, by which time their peculiar mode of raising crops on ground cleared by firing the jungle has exhausted all the land within easy reach. Their houses are built of logs and thatched with leaves, and the floors are raised several feet above the ground. Each house has its gayal or buffalo tethered near the door at night, and turned out to pasture during the day. These beasts are kept not for milking, but for eating at high festivals. A goat with a pure white shaggy coat and a pet pig generally belong to each household. The Loshais are very fond of hunting the wild elephants which abound in their hills. When they are not fighting among themselves, they make a raid upon British ground in quest of slaves and human heads. As they have lately learned the use of fire-arms and never attack a foe save by stealth, it is easy to see how dangerous a neighbour a Loshai tribe may be to the peaceful cultivators along our frontier. The attack is always preluded by "a sacrifice and a big drink;" due care being taken to let none of the women into the secret of any raid attempted without formal declaration of war. Instead of screwing up their courage with bhang and such-like stimulants, the younger warriors are supposed to gain strength and energy from eating the liver of the first man they kill. For further particulars regarding these savages the reader would do well to consult the pages of Captain Lewin's excellent work on "The Wild Races of South-Eastern India."

WE learn that an examination of candidates for forty appointments as assistant surgeons in the Indian Medical Service will be held at Chelsea Hospital on the 12th of February.

WE may venture to confirm the statement of a contemporary, that Sir Philip Wodehouse has been named to succeed Sir Seymour Fitzgerald as Governor of Bombay. Sir Philip has had a pretty long training in the public service, since the day he entered the Ceylon Civil Service, in 1829. Assistant Secretary and Clerk to the Legislative and Executive Councils in 1833, he became District Judge of Kandy in 1840, Government Agent for the Western Province in 1843, Superintendent of Honduras in 1851, Governor of British Guiana in 1854, and he has been Governor of the Cape ever since 1862. Altogether a goodly show of work done; but we could have wished that some deserving Anglo-Indian—and there must be not a few such—had obtained the post once held by Mountstuart Elphinstone and Sir George Clerk.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

SHAW'S VISIT TO EASTERN TURKISTAN.

FEW of those who read Mr. Shaw's narrative of his travels and adventures in Eastern Turkistan will see much need, we think, for the apologies put forth in his preface.* Still it was no doubt wise to disarm hasty criticism by explaining the causes which prevented the author from throwing his materials into more coherent and workmanlike shape. We for our part are glad to welcome in its present form a work which in its embryo stage has travelled five times between Europe and Asia. Every allowance must be made for a writer who had to work up his old journals "amidst the heats and discomforts of a voyage down the Red Sea in June," and whose further revision of his book was hindered by the dangerous illness consequent on the hardships of his second journey to Yarkand. But the book as it is makes no heavy demands upon the good nature of any reasonable reader, so many are the proofs it contains of the author's competency to travel over unexplored ground, and to describe the results of his undertaking.

Mr. Shaw's first journey to the Court of the Atalik Gházee, was carried out in 1868, as our readers may remember, in partial concert with poor Mr. Hayward, who was going in the same direction upon an errand from the Royal Geographical Society. Mr. Shaw's previous residence for some years in the Kangra Valley, had at once incited and trained him to the work of piercing the great mountain barrier which walls in the northern frontier of the Punjab. The stories he heard from the narrow-eyed Tibetan traders, the best-tempered of mortals, with "their high cheek-bones, their dirt, and their long pig-tails," heightened the curiosity roused by the descriptions of the few English sportsmen who returned from the wilder parts of Ladák, with reports of "wild sheep as large as ponies, wild cattle with bushy tails like horses, and long hair on their flanks reaching nearly to the ground;" to say nothing of antelopes, gazelles, strange monasteries perched on almost inaccessible rocks, of prayer-wheels, gigantic images, and ancient manuscripts. Of the wild country beyond Ladák he could gather little, save a few glimpses revealed by the very few native traders who brought back from Yarkand and Káshgar "frightful tales of toil endured, and of perils escaped." Something too he learned in vague rumours touching the Moghul rising against the Chinese rulers of Eastern Turkistan; and the murder of the German traveller, Adolph Schlagintweit, in 1857, had darkly illustrated one of the perils to which Europeans were exposed in following the traces of Marco Polo.

By way of preparing for his longer journey, Mr. Shaw in 1867 went through Ladak, intending to visit Khoten, where Mr. Johnson of the Revenue Survey had been hospitably entertained two years before. But by that time the friendly chief of Khoten had perished at the hands of Yakoob Beg, the future Atalik Ghazee and then lord of Yarkand and Káshghar, which he had wrested from the Chinese rule. Mr. Shaw therefore, keeping within the borders of Ladák, saw as much as he could of the wild table land of Roopshoo, where, at the level of Mont Blanc, broad valleys are begirt by "rolling mountains of all shades of red, yellow and black;" hill and plain alike forming a wild bare waste of gravel, through which here and there only crops out the underlying rock:—

Not a glimpse of verdure is to be seen, save in some slight depression where the eye at a distance catches a faint yellow gleam along the ground, which a nearer approach shows to be the effect of some scattered blades of a harsh and prickly grass, piercing up through the gravel like so many discoloured porcupine quills. When you begin to despair of finding those great travellers' requisites, water and wood, your guide will lead you into a recess of the hills, where a small stream derived from some distant snow-bed far up the hill sides has given rise, before disappearing under the gravel, to a thicket of brushwood two or three feet high, and where groups of shallow pits, surrounded by loose stone walls, each with its rough fireplace in the middle, point out where the wandering tribes of Tibetans occasionally pitch their tents. If you are wise you will take advantage of these sheltering side-walls, low and creviced though they be, for suddenly in the afternoon there will arise a terrific blast of deadly cold wind, which will numb all the life in your body under a dozen covers, if it strike you. The Tibetan traveller cares for no roof overhead, if he can shelter himself from the wind behind a three-foot high wall.

This at least was a pretty good foretaste of the rough journey reserved for the following year. On these wild plains, where the traveller may be scorched one hour and frozen the next, the air is so clear that there is no perspective, and you march for hours seeing always the same objects in front of you, and never seeming to "arrive anywhere." The patches of culture, which stand out sharp amidst the surrounding barrenness, are like bits of "the best cultivated parts of England, dropped here and there into a parched and howling waste," such as Aden is, "under an Italian sky, with an atmosphere which acts like a telescope." In some parts of Ladák the villages extend continuously for several miles amidst the luxuriant crops of a milder climate, only 1100 feet above the sea.

At Leh itself, the capital, which lies nestled under the hills about four miles from the Indus, Mr. Shaw spent a month in studying the habits of the Toorkees from the neighbouring regions, and learning all he could about the country he purposed visiting next year. During the cold weather at Kangra he made his arrangements for the intended journey, which he was to undertake in the character of a merchant. To avoid suspicion, he took with him no other scientific instrument than a prismatic compass, which would "pass as harmless even if seen." In May 1868 he set off up the lovely valley of Kooloo, crossing the Bara Lâcha Pass on the 2nd July. Beyond the Pass the scenery at once changes from the Alpine peaks, glaciers, forests, and deep gorges of the British side, to a vast sea of gravel crested with low hills. The height of this table-land above the sea averages 15,000 feet, and the hill peaks rise from three to five thousand feet higher. Even these are almost entirely free from snow, but the dry cold and bitter winds are felt there all the more keenly. On the 20th Mr. Shaw's party reached the Pangong Lake, which reminded him now of the Lake of Geneva, anon of Lake Lucerne; the utter absence of verdure alone distinguishing the one from the others. After a halt of many weeks at Leh, he started on the 20th September for the Karakash river, by way of the now famous Chang-chemo Valley, where he had to wait many days of October for his missing ponies and baggage. So great was the cold even then, that the ink in his pen kept freezing hard as he wrote. It was somewhere in the valley that he first met the late Mr. Hayward, who agreed to follow instead of accompanying Mr. Shaw to the Yarkand frontier.

To wait several hours of an icy evening for your baggage at the top of a pass 19,000 feet above the sea is not a pleasant proceeding. On such occasions, according to our author, the best way of keeping warm is to "squat down, kneeling against a bank, resting your head on the bank, and nearly between your knees. Then tuck your overcoat in all round you, over head and all; and if you are lucky, and there is not too much wind, you will make a little atmosphere of your own inside the covering, which will be snug in comparison with the outside air. Your feet suffer chiefly, but you learn to tie yourself into a kind of knot, suffering as many surfaces of your body together as possible." In this curious position Mr. Shaw says he passed whole nights and slept well, whereas stretched at full length he would never have got a wink. At some stages the poor horses had to assuage their thirst by munching the frozen snow, which, for want of fuel, could not be melted into water. The fuel for the travellers consisted often of "little bunches of shoots, three or four inches high, looking like lavender," and growing about seven or eight yards apart. It would take several hours to gather enough of these for the purpose; but their woody roots make a tolerable fire, and the green shoots serve at a pinch as food for famishing horses. One day Mr. Shaw shot a "fine old wild Yak," which measured ten feet from the nose to the insertion of the tail, and five feet and a half high at the shoulder.

After some more days of painful journeying down the Karakash valley, Mr. Shaw arrived at Shahidoolla, where, surrounded by Toorkee soldiers and subjects of Yakoob Beg, he awaited further instructions from that monarch. Meanwhile, he made some progress in speaking Toorkee and ingratiating himself with his Toorkee visitors, including the Mihmandâr, or "Welcomer of Guests," whose goodwill he won by showing him how to use a burning-glass, and cemented by a friendly shooting match. At length his messenger returned, but not with the King's answer, which arrived only after a fortnight's anxious waiting. It brought the desired permission to move forward. What happened thereafter must be reserved for another week.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—In a recent number of your Paper I dwelt briefly on the constant reiteration of charges of all kinds against the Maharaja of Kashmere, in the hope of their finally making some impression somewhere.

It is generally believed, and has been stated, that the Government of India have, after fullest enquiry, completely exonerated this person from any participation in the cowardly murder of Mr. Hayward; but as they have not yet done him the justice to give the required publicity to the result of this enquiry, I am not greatly astonished at finding, in a recent number of an Indian up-country paper, which delights in every opportunity to throw dirt at the Maharaja, a covert insinuation at Mir Walli of Tassun being supposed to be the murderer, the passage in which this allusion occurs being sown broad-cast with remarks on the conduct of the government and ruler of Kashmere. The evident intention of the supposition is to insinuate that some one else was the culprit.

Would it be below the dignity of the Indian Government, at home or abroad, to publish all the documents in their possession on this subject, either directly or indirectly through the Royal Geographical Society, with reference to Mr. Hayward having been their agent in Central Asia? It would be a simple act of fairness to a distinguished feudatory, and so, once for all, set the question at rest. So long as it remains, to a certain extent, open in consequence of this official reticence, His Highness's enemies and backbiters, who are neither few nor far between, can say that they have no proof that the Viceroy has really done what he is believed to have done, that is fully and absolutely acquitted the Maharaja of all blame whatever in the matter. As your paper is known to carry weight at the India House, I shall be thankful by your giving this a corner in your next issue.

NATIVE PRINCES OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In your issue of the 26th ult. I read with considerable astonishment the lecture by Mr. F. W. Chesson on the "Princes of India: their Rights and our Duties." Now, to form a sound and impartial opinion upon such a subject, one must have mixed freely and intimately with the natives of that country, and have become perfectly familiar with their language, habits, and modes of thought. Mr. Chesson does not appear even to have enjoyed the advantage of a residence in India, and it is not therefore to be wondered at that his conclusions are somewhat hasty and erroneous. The annexation of Oude is animadverted upon in very severe terms by the lecturer, and the policy of Lord Dalhousie most unjustifiably called into question, and I cannot allow such an attack to pass without a few words in vindication of one of the wisest of Indian statesmen. The circumstances attending the transaction are related explicitly enough in the Blue-books of the period, but, as the lapse of time may have effaced them from the memory of some of your readers, I will briefly mention a few of the most salient facts.

By the treaty of 1801 between the late East India Company and the sovereign of Oude, the latter, in consideration of being protected by the former against all enemies foreign or domestic, engaged to administer his kingdom in the manner most conducive to the welfare of his subjects and the prosperity of the country. The British authorities performed their part of the contract, and at immense sacrifice and inconvenience preserved the territory of Oudh from foreign invasion and internal sedition; but the pledge given by the Ruler of the country was systematically ignored and violated from first to last. For half a century the British Government was content to plead with the King of Oudh on behalf of his oppressed subjects and addressed to him from time to time solemn warnings of the result to which persistence in a course of misgovernment must inevitably lead. Remonstrance and menace, however, proved alike ineffectual; the Oudh Government under each succeeding sovereign became more and more corrupt and tyrannical, while the people became more and more hopeless and desperate. The kings were venal and dissolute, swayed by the caprices of the lowest prostitutes and addicted to the most degrading vices; the revenue was arbitrarily extorted and lavishly squandered; the army disorganised and clamouring for pay proved rather a terror than a protection to the peaceable inhabitants; law and justice were unknown, and gangs of armed marauders rendered life and property everywhere insecure. In 1847 Wajid Ali Shah ascended the throne, and by his atrocious and extravagant conduct exceeded not only his predecessors, but even the proverbial license of the East. He took no part whatever in the government of the country, but existed only for the gratification of his own mad fancies and brutish appetites. He consorted with the lowest nautch girls and musicians, practising their effeminate arts and assuming their dress; he even appeared before his subjects in the costume of a nautchee, and with his hair streaming down his back, and with bells and anklets upon his naked legs he danced in public to the accompaniment of the tambourine and lute. He assumed to be an avatar of the Deity, and to hold illicit intercourse with beings of the other world; he contracted a fresh marriage every night, and did not scruple to unite himself with a mehterani. Suffice it to say that the wretched Prince lived a life of wanton and abandoned dissipation, and, to the last, strove to divest himself of every particle of that self-respect which even the worst of his class have hitherto retained. No woman was safe from his agents' machinations, no man's life and property was secure from his unscrupulous rapacity. The interest upon the loans which he had contracted varied from twenty to thirty per cent., and their hard earnings were wrung by torture and violence from the wretched peasantry to satisfy his clamorous creditors. The King was repeatedly warned by the late General Sir William Sleeman, in the kindest and most considerate manner, that, unless he kept to the Treaty, and consented to introduce the necessary reforms, and to bestir himself for the amelioration of his people's lamentable condition, he must pay the penalty of his neglect and misdeeds. He, however, disdained to receive advice, and treated the warnings of the British Government with contumely and evasion. Action was imperative, but the Government, ever considerate, and willing to afford him opportunities of reformation, reiterated their appeals. It was not until this course had entirely failed, and until the case had been carefully and impartially considered both in England and India, that Lord Dalhousie was directed to annex the province. This important and delicate duty his Lordship performed in a moderate and humane manner—it was the crowning act of an administration beset with unprecedented difficulties, which he had surmounted one after another with statesmanlike tact and skill. Instead of censure, Lord Dalhousie deserves the gratitude of all honest men for having satisfactorily achieved the more than Herculean task of cleansing the Augæan stables of Lucknow. If Mr. Chesson should consider my strictures as too severe, I would refer him to the published pension-list of the ex-King of Oudh; there he will find the names of the most degraded parasites, ministers of the most abominable vices, set down as worthy recipients of the public bounty—he will find the offspring of prostitutes, and even worse, provided for out of the public purse. And what is the condition of Oudh now? Where law and justice were mere bywords, where life and property were never safe, and where the basest crimes were the readiest roads to honour and preferment, the people now enjoy justice, peace, and prosperity. Oudh owes its very life to the policy of Lord Dalhousie, and posterity will vindicate the wisdom of his measures.

Mr. Chesson's remarks upon the imposition of the income-tax are worthy of more consideration. That measure was a peculiarly unfortunate one, and must be considered as a dangerous mistake. It is to be hoped that the present Government will not undo the good its predecessors have done by persisting in the collection of so arbitrary a tax, and one so distasteful to the prejudices, and opposed to the historical traditions of the people. If it be not discontinued the results may prove more serious than those who wish for the welfare of India would like to contemplate. In agitating this question Mr. Chesson has done real service to the State.

The lecturer has invited the sympathy of the public in behalf of the ex-Nawab of Tonk. This case is a far different one from that of Oudh, and deserves very careful attention at the hands of the home authorities. We entered into a treaty with Ameer Khan in 1817, and from that time until the present day there is no pretence of mal-administration on the part of the Nawab, or of his having departed in any way from the conditions of the treaty. He was deposed upon a charge of murder, of which he emphatically protests his innocence, and demands a full investigation and an impartial trial. This, it must be confessed, he has not yet received, and while his reasonable request for an enquiry remains uncomplished, and until the charge against him is substantiated, it is scarcely fair to place him upon the same footing with an infamous and degraded debauchee like the ex-King of Oudh. I cordially concur with Mr. Chesson in hoping that the British Government will at least suspend their final decision in this case until the ex-Nawab has had the opportunity of defending himself against the charges brought against him.

As to the claims of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal they have been already satisfactorily discussed in the House of Commons and satisfactorily disposed of. If the supporters of his claims are moved, as they would have us suppose, by the mere love of justice and by pure philanthropy, why do they not also advocate the cause of poor Ommichand, who was as much a traitor to his Royal Master as Mir Jafar? I cannot, however, believe that these bursts of virtuous indignation in favour of H.H. the Nawab Nazim proceed from such entirely disinterested motives.

There is no doubt but that a special tribunal ought to be constituted before which the appeals of Indian Princes might be heard and decided upon by competent authorities; but surely there should be some limit of time assigned. If every long-standing grievance of every petty Indian Prince is to be brought before our courts, and if the claims of every imbecile debauchee or designing impostor are to be made the vehicle for blackening the fame of those statesmen who have won India for the British Crown, then we had better take to our ships.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

E. H. PALMER,

Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I read with much pleasure in your impression of the 19th ult., a letter from Syed Abdoollah, headed "The Mohammedans and the assassination of Mr. Justice Norman." The assassin died without divulging the names of those who had tempted him to the commission of his barbarous crime, and in the total absence of any evidence it is idle to speculate upon the subject. To indulge in mere suspicion, and to cast an imputation upon any particular tribe or caste, can only raise bad blood, and may turn a sincere friend into a bitter enemy. It is exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the state of public feeling in India; the people are not at all addicted to outward manifestations of feeling, and are naturally inclined to habits of reticence and distrust. Nevertheless, I do not for a moment believe that the Mohammedans of India are, as a class, disaffected to the British rule. The lazy ne'er-do-weel hangers on to some effete native courts, with here and there a soi-disant Nawab in receipt of a fat pension, to which he would find it hard to make out his title—such individuals as these are no doubt often discontented, and sigh after the good old times when a native prince and his favourites could put a private enemy to death, or kidnap a neighbour's wife with impunity. But with these exceptions I believe that the educated Mohammedans of the East fully appreciate the benefits of our rule, and I do not hesitate to say that the statements contained in the alarmist article which appeared in the Times of the 25th ult. are utterly futile and without foundation. Everyone acquainted with Eastern life knows the influence which the religious mendicant class possesses in the native community, how often a saintly dervish is commanded in a dream to denounce a whole district, or receives a miraculous revelation of the approaching death of some great man—the ill omen to be, of course, averted by a pecuniary present to the seer. Surely the acts of designing fanatics must not be regarded as an indication of popular feeling, and allowed to outweigh the evidence of loyalty which so many of our Mussulman fellow-subjects gave in their support of the British power during its greatest trial in 1857, when the Mutiny which threatened that power with annihilation was suppressed only by the assistance of staunch Mohammedan allies. I have never been in India, and it may be, therefore, considered impertinent in me to presume to judge of the state of feeling in the country. I have, however, had many opportunities of judging the question, for, having been at various times a correspondent of several of the principal native papers of India, I have enjoyed the advantage of corresponding with many influential native gentlemen in different parts of the country, to whom I have become known through the medium of my Persian and Urdu writings, and from whom I have learnt much of the state of feeling amongst the educated classes.

Amongst those whose friendship it has thus been my good fortune to form was the late Maulavie Syed Rejeb Ali Khan, without question one of the ablest Muslims in India, and a stout adherent of the British Government. At the time of the negotiations with the Ruler of the Punjab for obtaining his sanction to the passage of British troops through his dominions to Afghanistan during the campaigns which resulted in the annexation of the Punjab to British territory, and again during the siege of Delhi in 1857, the Maulavie rendered us services of which it would be impossible to overestimate the value. I will quote, as an instance, the words of Sir John (now Lord) Lawrence in a letter addressed to the Maulavie, and dated August 17th, 1857:—"When your letter reached the hands of the Delhi insurgents it must have given them as great a shock as the falling of a bombshell in the midst of a powder magazine. I mean they must have been altogether disconcerted, and lost all confidence in one another." The letter had, indeed, the desired effect, dissension and mutual distrust crept into the sepoy camp, and the forces of the mutineers, weakened by defection, became an easy conquest to the British arms. It was the Syed Rejeb Ali who induced the King of Delhi and his sons to surrender, and several of the Maulavie's own men and relatives fell fighting at his side upon that memorable occasion. His reward was that he became an object of envy to the English, who spoke of him as the one-eyed Moulvie, a shrewd "and astute spy of Lawrence's." It is true that he received a small jagher which had been promised him in 1845 by the late Major Broadfoot in the presence of Sir Frederick Currie, in recognition of his services, but the Civil Star of India, a distinction which he earnestly desired, was denied him, although it has been conferred on many much less deserving subjects. The Maulavie is now dead, and his family are unprovided for, the sons being compelled to disperse themselves over the country in search of employment. This is not encouraging to Mahomedans of distinction who have the opportunity or the desire to serve the British Power. Maulavie Syed Ahmed Khan, C.S.I., again, whose services to the Government are too well known to need mention from me, can hardly be said to have received an adequate reward. However, it is not my purpose here to vindicate the claims of underpaid servants of the Crown, but to show that the Mohammedans of India have, at many an important crisis, evinced loyalty and firm attachment to the British Government. The Sikh and Rajpoot chiefs have ever been conspicuous for their loyalty; and it must be borne in mind that these Princes have, in every instance, Mohammedan ministers, who entirely manage the affairs of the Raj. But I need not multiply instances. That the majority of our Mohammedan fellow subjects entertain a friendly and loyal feeling towards the British Crown is sufficiently patent from many noble examples. Unfounded suspicions and arbitrary acts are not the most likely means of perpetuating this kindly feeling.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

Spirit of the Indian Press.

DR. W. W. HUNTER.

The Bombay Gazette is curious to know what is the meaning of the notification in the Gazette of India that Dr. W. W. Hunter is allowed, as an exceptional case, nine months' privilege leave instead of three. The Gazette oracularly assures us that "this concession is made entirely on public grounds, and to enable Dr. Hunter to undertake certain important public duties," but what these duties are is left to our imagination. We were under the impression that Dr. Hunter had certain important public duties to perform in India, though of course we do not mean to say that that is any reason why he should stop here. In the ordinary course of Indian administration a public servant is only appointed to an office now, in order that he may go home on leave and get somebody else to "act" for him during his absence. But, as the Government of India has thought it desirable to tell us that Dr. Hunter will have his leave extended in order to allow him time for special work, we wish it had taken us fully into its confidence and declared plainly what is the nature of this mysterious work. Perhaps the solution of the problem is that Dr. Hunter has accepted the challenge offered him by Mr. Geddes, in the suggestive and interesting evidence in which the statistics of the author of "Annals of Rural Bengal," regarding the great famine in the time of Warren Hastings, were criticised as grossly inaccurate. Dr. Hunter certainly ought to be called as a witness before the Commons' Committee, and we have no reason to suppose that he will be backward in defending the reputation of his book for trustworthiness in matters of fact. His other work, "Our Indian Mussulmans," will not come under review in the course of the Select Committee's inquiries into the financial affairs of India; but it is quite intelligible that the Secretary of State should wish to see and have some conversation with the writer of a book that has made such a sensation both at home and in this country. Possibly his Grace may desire to know why the Indian Government sanctioned the publication of a pamphlet denouncing all Wahabees as traitors at a time when it was endeavouring to establish a case of constructive treason against the Wahabee Ameer Khan. Mr. Anstey certainly did not go beyond bounds when, in his speech at Calcutta a few weeks ago, he spoke of Dr. Hunter's book as having excited a prejudice against his client.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

The Indian Daily News thinks the fact that native members will very rarely venture to raise their voices against any pet schemes, which the executive authorities are desirous of introducing, imparts a very cruel significance to the sufficiently numerous instances in which opposition that has been respectfully, if earnestly, offered, has been contemptuously or tyrannically overridden. Instances, rare only in comparison with the thousands of cases in which intimidated native members have considered it prudent to escape the resentment of the district demi-god by acquiescing blindly in his decrees—instances, we say, may be multiplied, in which men who have honestly brought it to the knowledge of the magistrature that public feeling was dead against visionary schemes, have been incontinent and discourteously snubbed. And it is hardly to be wondered at that among a people who are not fortified with traditions of valour and freedom, jo hukum has become a standing order of the day. In one case that we can call to mind, and which will serve as an illustration, the magistrate of one of the largest stations in Eastern Bengal, inspired by the civil surgeon, took it into his head that a superfluity of vegetation was the cause of the fever that prevailed in the district. Not only were shrubs and other noxious jungle forthwith destroyed—that was well enough in its way—but a mandate was issued for the felling of magnificent trees of many years' growth, which had positively furnished protection to villages from storm and rain. Among other victims of this insane and cruel order, there fell a goodly number of fruit and areca-nut trees, from which their owners had derived a decent income in the past. Protest after protest was made to the Municipal authorities—but they were made only to be disregarded. There was no voice in the Municipal Board to support the cry of the people; and, as far as we could ascertain, no compensation whatever was afforded to the persons who had been injured by the carrying out of the order. In some of its features, this is possibly an exceptional case; but we have reason to know that in all those features which serve to illustrate the irresponsibility of the district officer, and the utter mockery of "Municipal Institutions" in Bengal, it is a mere type of hundreds that may be cited. It is easier, no doubt, to point out an evil than to point out an efficient remedy. But we need have little hesitation in offering the opinion that, if the people are prepared for Municipal Institutions at all, Municipalities should be real and effective exponents of popular will, and not as at present a mere sham. Either the mofussil Municipalities should be abolished, or the residents of large civil stations ought to have some voice in their government. Unprepared as the masses undoubtedly are for political representation, we cannot see why, if Municipalities are to be retained at all, the inhabitants of the larger stations should not have some voice in the election of members for their respective quarters of the town. And we think that a rigid compulsion should be laid on all district officers to defer to the opinions of majorities, in all but the exceptional instances, of very infrequent occurrence, in which prompt independent action on the part of the district authority is necessary to save life or property from destruction.

A SAD CASE.—Mr. Joseph Clarkson, of No. 11, Gungadur Baboo's lane, Calcutta, reported to the police last Sunday that three children were on the 3rd inst. left under his care by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. McCleymont, both of whom, owing to sickness, were compelled to go into hospital at the same time. Mrs. McCleymont died on the 4th, and Mr. McCleymont on the 16th. The eldest, a girl named Margaret, is six years of age, and the other two (boys) named William and Thomas, aged three and a-half years and five months respectively. The parents having left them unprovided for, it was his intention to adopt the youngest, and to send the other two to school through the aid of Archbishop Steins.—Daily Examiner.

AN EXCITING TIGER HUNT IN BENARES.—On Monday morning last, when Mr. McMullin, the Officiating Assistant Superintendent of Police at Benares, went into the city on duty, he was surprised at being told that some wild beast during the night had seriously wounded several people in the city near the Manikaranka Ghaut. He was further told that the animal was then sitting in a dark recess on the top of some steps. Going to the spot and looking up he could in fact plainly see two eyes glaring in the darkness. Taking a musket from one of the police, he fired, when with a fearful roar a huge tiger bounded from the recess and rushed like a flash of lightning down the steps. Fortunately Mr. McMullin had hit him in the forearm, and the tiger, missing his aim, fell into a hole. A policeman then fired at him but missed. The same man then attempted to prod the tiger with his bayonet, but this unfortunately fell off, and the tiger recovering himself, sprang on the policeman, mauling him severely. A large crowd were now gathered round, and a scene of the utmost confusion ensued. The tiger bounded furiously about, wounding people on all sides. But now files of policemen appeared on the scene. As they marched up with loaded muskets and fixed bayonets, the hours of the tiger seemed to be numbered. Unfortunately the police were not provided with caps for their muskets, and had to beat an ignominious retreat. Seeing the state of affairs, Mr. McMullin rode off to cantonments to obtain assistance. He returned after the interval of about an hour with some officers, who, being professional gunners, brought with them both guns and caps. In the meantime other gentlemen had come up, and the tiger was at length brought to bay in a place enclosed with walls, near the Raj Mandil. Some hairbreadth escapes took place, Mr. Thompson, the Assistant Magistrate (fortunately) falling through the roof of a house in escaping from the infuriated animal. A well-directed volley from a number of guns at length laid low the noble animal, who fell game to the last. Altogether he had wounded twelve people; one of whom, a poor old woman, whom he seized on the top of a three-storey house, is not expected to recover. No one up to the present time can tell where the tiger came from, but it seems probable that he had come from the Maharajah's preserves at Chuckea, crossing the Ganges at Raj Ghaut by the bridge of boats during the night. The natives are in a state of great excitement, there being a tradition that when tigers eat people in the streets of Benares then the day of tribulation will have come. It is hoped that Mr. McMullin will present the skin to be placed at the entrance of the new Town-hall.—Pioneer, Dec. 20.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

A correspondent, whose letter is dated Camp, No. 1 Station, Loshai Expeditionary Force, Dec. 4, 1871, sends us the following information:—

"The head-quarters and right wing of the 44th N.I., arrived at No. 1 station on the 2nd inst., and quickly transformed a howling wilderness of forest into a pleasant looking and picturesque camp. No. 1 station is about seven miles from Mynadur, and is the first camp towards Tipai Mookh. A large quantity of boats with stores arrived at the camp the same day as the 44th. This fleet will go up as far as possible. Hitherto the river Buruk has been found quite navigable; it is a beautiful broad stream, running through a very picturesque country with dense jungle on both banks down to the river side. General Bouchier and staff arrived on the 3rd, and on the 4th proceeded on to the next camp, where the Sappers are. The 44th are expected to move on there the next day, to be followed by the 22nd Punjab N.I., who are now at Mynadur; the 42nd are expected to the front shortly. The health and spirits of both officers and men is excellent. The left wing of the 44th N.I. is at Mynadur to-day; the Peahawur Mountain Battery will come on as soon as the road is made passable for elephants."—Indian Daily News, Dec. 18.

The following intelligence has reached Government from the columns of the Loshai Expeditionary Force:—

From General Bouchier, C.B., dated Camp, 4 miles beyond Tipari Mookh. "Marched yesterday about four miles in a south-easterly direction from Tipari Mookh. Two hundred of 44th and company of Sappers with me move on three miles further to-day. Road fair. A hundred of the 22nd Native Infantry leave Tipari Mookh to-morrow. The road between No. 4 Station and Tipari Mookh has been our greatest difficulty. Commissariat supplies coming up in abundance by water to Tipari Mookh, which place is being fortified. General Nuthall reports attack by Loshais on one of his working parties between Tsiklapi and Tseboo on 1st December. Munipoor Subadar killed, and twelve Loshais. Five Loshai heads brought in, and five muskets, one bearing tower mark. Munipoorees 35 strong."

From General Brownlow, C.B., 15th December:—"My advanced post is at Vanoonah's village, on the Rai Jan Klang."

From General Brownlow, C.B., Rai Jan Klang Range, 15th Dec.:—"Yesterday, a small reconnoitring party under Colonel Macpherson surprised the village of Vanoonah, a Sylhoo Chief. The tribe had previously rejected all overtures, and fired upon us. Seven or eight of the enemy were killed or wounded. No casualties among the Goorkhas. We have occupied the village, which is perched in a very commanding position on the summit of the range. The enemy fired it before they fled."

We are indebted to the Bengal Times for the following return of troops, who have proceeded with the Chittagong Division of the Loshai Expedition beyond Demagiri:—

2nd Goorkhas.—534 men, 80 public followers, 50 private followers, and 7 military officers.

No. 3 Company Sappers and Miners.—96 native soldiers, 32 public followers, 2 non-commissioned officers, and Lieut. Hyslop.

Peshawur Mountain Train Battery.—35 native soldiers, 106 public followers, and 4 officers.

27th Punjab Native Infantry.—506 native troops, 114 public followers, 2 native sappers, and 17 officers, native and European.

The Brigadier-General, accompanied by Captain Lewin, the Political Officer, has advanced with the above troops.

THE LEFT COLUMN, CAMP MAINADHAR, ON THE BARAK, Dec. 6.—Here we are some fifty-four miles S.E. of Cachar, and some twenty-four miles from Tepai Mukh, which has been set apart as the base of operations. The 22nd arrived here on the 3rd, having left Cachar on the 24th November, and have been principally employed during this time in road-making between Alni, on the River Barak, and this place, Mainadhar, for between Cachar and Mainadhar it is only a five days' march. It seems that the roads over which we have been marching, and which we have, at the same time, been improving, were only lately made by a party of Manipuris and Kukis employed for the purpose, but without any engineering supervision; so these fellows, being left to their own devices, made the road after their own fashion, as straight as an arrow, and they carried it straight up the hills and down the opposite side, without any attempt to lessen the steepness by diversions of any kind. Apparently it was only when troops had to march over these roads that it was discovered how the road-making party performed their work. There was certainly a path, but so awfully steep in most places, that the authorities, on having to march over it themselves, came to the conclusion that it would be impossible, without considerably diverting the road round the hills, to bring laden elephants by it. For these animals, as well as for the troops, this road was originally intended. To improve it, the 22nd was set to work under the supervision of the Executive Engineer of the district, and the Right Wing of the 44th, commanded by Captain Udney, also assisted under the same supervision. At first the 44th worked from Lackipur to Alni, and the 22nd at first from Alni to Mainadhar Ferry, and afterwards from a place called Bhubandharkhall, seven miles in front on towards Bhubandhar tea garden. The 44th moved up to Mainadhar, and worked towards the camp of the 22nd at Bhubandharkhall. After the latter regiment had been three days at work (29th November to 1st December), they were ordered to march straight to Mainadhar, as the authorities had by that time come to the conclusion that the road would take too long to complete properly as to allow of laden elephants passing along. They had consequently relinquished the idea of bringing the animals laden. The Sappers and Miners had, in the meantime, arrived at Mainadhar, and commenced to make a road between that place and Tepai Mukh, as there is no road at all to this place by land, the only means of reaching it at present being by water. Assisting the Sappers and Miners were the Head Quarters and Right Wing of the 44th Regiment, under Colonel Hicks. By the 3rd these men had made six miles of good road towards Tepai Mukh, and established a camp there, to which the name of Stage No. 1 is at present given. To this camp the general and his staff moved on the afternoon of the 3rd December. On the morning of the 5th, the 22nd P.N.I.'s Head Quarters and Right Wing under Colonel Stafford, marched to Stage No. 1 to be employed in improving the road. In the meantime, the Sappers and the right Wing of the 44th have cleared another six miles of road, and established Stage No. 2, to which they have moved their camp. To-day the Left Wing of the 44th, which reached Mainadhar yesterday, march for Stage No. 1, also to be employed on the road. The Telegraph Department, under Mr. Pitman, have set up the line beyond Stage No. 1, and have opened an office. For some days past a telegraph office has been opened at Mainadhar. At Mainadhar there are several large Commissariat godowns, with, it is said, two months' rations for the whole force. As yet very few stores have gone on towards Tepai Mukh, but each regiment, as it left, has taken twenty days' rations with it. The General expects to have the road completed as far as Tepai Mukh by the 10th. When that is done, godowns must be built for the Commissariat, a stockade to protect the depot hospitals, and a few barracks; at the same time, stores must be accumulated. All this will take time. At the same time, the remainder of the force, consisting of the 42nd N.I., and the left wing of the 22nd Punjab N.I., will have to arrive from Cachar, where they were yesterday. Such being the state of things at present, I do not think a general advance can be made into the Loshai territory until the 24th or 25th of the month. The Artillery arrived at Mainadhar to day. The unladen elephants, with Mr. Nuthall, are expected to-morrow. At present Mainadhar is the most advanced depot of the Force. I see there is a large depot hospital which was organised by Dr. Harvey, who has been sent on to Tepai Mukh in order to be on the spot in readiness to establish another there. Dr. Nicholson, of the 22nd, has been detained here for the present to look after the depot hospital, and act the part of Sanitary officer to the Station. Dr. Macdonnell ought to have been here to do this work, but the outbreak of cholera amongst coolies at Chittack occasioned his being sent back to Cachar immediately on the arrival at Mainadhar on Nov. 28. Drs. White, of the 42nd, and Greig, of the 4th, together with the Dewan of Sylhet, were all hurried off to Chittack.—Englishman Correspondent.

THE RIGHT COLUMN.—DEMAGIRI, Dec. 4.—The head quarters and half the regiment of the 2nd Goorkhas, under Colonel Macpherson, have advanced in the direction of Vanooa Ghat, and established a cooly dak for provisions as far back as Demagiri. At the different stages detachments of the remaining wing are stationed, who furnish the escort and "hank on" the coolies from stage to stage. General Brownlow leaves to-morrow or the next day for the front, taking with him a portion of Colonel Hill's Mountain Battery. The 27th P.N.I., under Colonel Doran, have arrived from Kassalong, bringing with them ten elephants. The Sappers and Miners and 2nd Goorkhas seem to have a good deal of sickness among them, principally fever. About a fourth of the Sappers are on the sick list, and sixty of the Goorkhas; but both these corps have had a good deal of work in the jungle. They have been a month in the country now, and nearly the whole of that time has been spent in cutting roads and clearing camping grounds. The first march out from Kassalong was perhaps amusing but monotonous; the road (and such a road) lies over a succession of hills so steep as to necessitate steps up and down. I don't think there is 100 yards in the whole march that is level. I used to think going down hill much easier work than going up; the road from Kassalong to Burkul upsets that idea entirely, unless you are cloven-footed and can cling on to the slippery mud on a road at an angle of about 80 degs. from the base. The march from Burkul to Demagiri is the road for a picnic, nice and shady the whole way. The second march out from Burkul is the one especially commended to tourists in the pursuit of amusements. You start about 8 A.M., and you walk along a stream with water from two inches to three feet deep, and you continue to walk in this said water till 6 o'clock in the evening, and by that time you come to an encampment. The sun does not bother you in the least, for I don't suppose an observant man would manage to see more than about three square feet of sky during the ten hours he is marching. I am told the scenery is very fine, and I am content to believe it on hearsay. My own experience is this: up to ten o'clock in the day there is a dense fog, and after that has cleared up, the jungle is so dense that it's as dark as a bag; and even if you could see any distance, you require all the eyes you have got to pick your way over the rocks and boulders that you frequently come upon in the bed of the streams. Now and then you come upon some magnificent timber (at least to look at) from eighty to a hundred feet high, the gurgon tree I think it is; as timber, I believe it is of little use, the grain being very coarse indeed, but it gives a good deal of oil, which exudes from it when burnt. The orchids are very fine indeed, and grow in profusion; there is hardly a tree without about half a dozen orchids on it, and some trees have as many as twenty sticking to them. The prettiest things I have seen as yet are the butterflies, and they are very fine; one in particular, a beautiful sapphire-coloured one. But it does not do to look about you too much. If when you are nicely poised on a slippery rock some one calls your attention to a splendid something worth seeing, don't look, it's a snare; if you do, you sit down violently where you had no idea or inclination of sitting, slide off into four inches of mud and two feet of water; everybody laughs, and in the confusion various leeches take advantage of your position, and fasten on behind your ear. One of the sappers got over forty leeches on his leg at one time, so if you only get a few you are ill-favoured.—Daily News Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

DREADFUL EXPLOSION AT INDORE.—By private letter from Indore we regret to learn that the powder magazine of the Maharajah Holkar, on the south side of the city of Indore, exploded a few days ago, causing the death of from 70 to 80 persons. Nearly two lakhs of rupees of property was destroyed. The explosion caused great disturbance and consternation in the city, and the natives made a great noise and wailing, which continued for some time after the accident.—Deccan Herald.

UNCOVENANTED PENSIONS.—A meeting of directors and subscribers to the Uncovenanted Family Pension Fund was held on the 16th December, at the Town-hall, Calcutta, for the purpose of taking into consideration a proposal made to present Mr. J. B. Roberts with a testimonial for the valuable services he has rendered to the above fund for a long period of years. The meeting empowered the directors of the fund to confer with Mr. Roberts, and determine, according to his wish, the form of the testimonial.

THE POLICE AND THE MAGISTRATE.—The Englishman trusts that if no other good comes out of the late dispute between the Commissioner of Police and Chief Magistrate of Calcutta, it will at least lead to an authoritative definition of the relations between Magistrate and Police, and adds—"Calcutta law, we are aware, is not Mofussil law, but the difference between Calcutta and the rest of the world must be much greater than we supposed if the reasons which govern this important question are of a totally opposite character within and without the Ditch."

FINE ARTS.—The Fine Arts Exhibition at the Dalhousie Institute was to be opened by the Viceroy on Monday afternoon, Dec 25, at half-past four o'clock. The Exhibition promises to be a great success, more than 300 original pictures having been received by the committee. The hall is admirably adapted for the purposes of an Exhibition, the light being very equally diffused. The Musical Society of the Institute were to sing at the commencement of the proceedings. The Exhibition will be open to the general public till Jan. 2.

THE SEISTAN MISSION.—A contemporary states that Colonel F. R. Pollock, Commissioner of Peshawur, in en route to the Seistan border to determine the dispute between Afghanistan and Persia in conjunction with Sir J. Goldsmid. Dr. Bellew, civil surgeon of Peshawur, who accompanied the last Cabool mission of Colonel Lumsden, will be of the party, and his great knowledge of the language and people will be of use. Colonel Pollock will travel via the Bolan and Kandahar. The mission will last two or three months.

COMMISSARIAT.—We (Indian Daily News) understand that Ross Mangles, Esq., Colonel Innes, and Colonel Sibley, have been appointed members of the committee about to sit on the Commissariat Examiner's Office. Whatever may be the conclusions at which they arrive, the Controller of Military Accounts and the Commissary General have, it is said, placed on record their condemnations of the system at present in force in that office. From the action now taken, it would appear that the Government is not satisfied with the soundness of those opinions, but why or wherefore we are unable to state.

LOAN TRANSFERS.—The Governor general in Council is pleased to direct that the Notification of the Public Debt Office, published as an advertisement in the Gazette of India of 17th April, 1869, relative to transfers to be allowed from one Government loan to another, be cancelled from this date. Transfers will now be allowed from any of the earlier 4 per Cent. Loans into the 4 per Cent. Loan of 1842-43, or the 4 per Cent. Loan of 1865, which will, henceforward be styled the 4 per Cent. Consolidated Loan of 1842-43, and the 4 per Cent. Consolidated Loan of 1865, or from either of these Loans into the other. The interest of the Loan of 1842-43 is payable on the 1st Feb. and 1st August, while the interest on the Loan of 1865 is payable on the 1st May and 1st November. An opportunity will thus be afforded to stock-holders, who desire to obtain quarterly payments of interest, to secure that object by investing one-half of their holdings in each of the Loans mentioned.

MEDICAL.—Surgeon-major J. P. Brougham has retired from the Indian Medical Service on a pension of £550 per annum. The Government of India, in the Military Department, have decided that so long as a staff assistant surgeon, who is promoted to a staff surgeoncy, and brought on the Indian Establishment, is doing the duty of a surgeon, that is, in medical charge of a regiment or depot, he should be considered entitled to Indian allowances of the higher rank from the date of his promotion, provided he is for the full period within the authorised number of staff surgeons.

KASHMERE.—It is stated by a native paper that the Maharajah of Kashmere takes a very active interest in the progress of Sanskrit learning in his territory. Thousands of Brahmin youths are educated in that language at the expense of the State, and get, besides, books and allowances for maintenance. As a sure way of giving a stimulus to the study of Sanskrit, the Rajah has made a rule that no Brahmins who have not studied Sanskrit and become proficient in it shall receive the honour and esteem due to their position in Hindoo society, or be even permitted to marry.

SUDDEN DEATH OF AN OFFICER.—Major James Leonard was found dead last Sunday in his residence, No. 1, Tank-place, Hastings, Calcutta. He had been left the evening previous by his servant apparently in good health, who found him next morning lifeless, quite cold and stiff, in his bathroom. A post mortem examination was held on the premises by the Police Surgeon, from which it was ascertained that the Major had died of apoplexy. The Coroner, who was informed of the circumstances, on receiving the doctor's certificate to the above effect, ordered the disposal of the body, which was buried yesterday morning by the military authorities with due military honours.—Englishman, Dec. 19.

MILITARY.—A letter from Umballa says the station is denuded of its standing garrison, with the exception of the 72nd Highlanders, which, however, is under orders to march, or move, to join the camp about the 20th. Three companies of the 85th Foot are in from Dug-shai to carry on the duties.—The Indian Daily News says:—"Colonel Chitty, military accountant, Bombay, has come round to Calcutta with a view to place in harmony the systems of account in force at the two Presidencies. A Madras pay examiner is also said to have travelled to the City of Palaces with a view to enlarge his mind."—The officers at the camp at Delhi will, according to a correspondent of a contemporary, have to devote some of their time to study as well as to military manoeuvres. He says that a pamphlet on "Out-post Duty," and another on "Artillery Tactics in the Field in combination with the other Arms," have just been published, with which officers attending the camp of exercise are to make themselves acquainted.—The 11th N.I., under command of Colonel Watson, left Dum Dum on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 19, for the camp of exercise at Delhi, to proceed, on the breaking up of the camp, to Bareilly, in relief, as already ordered.—It has just been notified, for general information, that the force known as the "Ajmere and Mhairwarra Police Battalion" was reorganised as a military corps, under the title of the "Mhairwarra Battalion," on the 1st day of April, 1871.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 20.—Prices have altered very little since our last, but the tendency is rather upwards. During the past few days some speculative purchases of Shirtings and Twists have been made in the bazaar, which has tended to establish a somewhat more confident feeling among the dealers.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 20.—Jute: Holders of fine qualities stand out for extreme rates, which has somewhat checked buyers; the stock in the market is 160,000 maunds. Saltpetre: What business has been done at a fall of about 2 annas all round, and we now quote Calcutta-washed Rs. 7-8 to 7-10, and crude, 5 to 8, refraction, Rs. 5-6 to 5-12. Rice: A little new Ballam has found its way to market, and may be quoted at from Rs. 2-3 to 2-4. Linseed: The crop being nearly exhausted, holders stand out for full rates, whilst the high rates of freight make shippers cautious. Raw Silk: Accounts received of the prospects of the November bund are not so favourable, but buyers of the stock of Rainy bund still in the market will not come forward at the rates ruling. Corahs: Offers of Rs. 153 for the best marks were made during the week; the stock in Calcutta is now very limited.

COLONEL FIRTH.—The claims of Colonel Firth, late 19th M.N.I., have been taken into the favourable consideration of the Madras Commander-in-Chief, and that officer has been appointed 2nd in command to the 35th M.N.I. about to proceed to Kaimtee.

THE NILGHERRIES.—Mr. J. H. Kenrick is engaged in taking a series of photographs of groups of the native tribes of the Nilgherries—their ornaments, domestic utensils, musical instruments, etc. We believe these photographs will accompany the report on the Archaeology of the Nilgherry Hills, now being prepared under instructions from the Madras Government, by the Commissioner. The photographs, some of which we have seen, are very well taken, and will form very interesting records of the native tribes and their customs.—South of India Observer, Dec. 14.

MILITARY.—The 18th Hussars left Secunderabad on the 25th Nov. Instead of taking what is called the "canoe route," which is the usual road for troops to Bangalore across the Kistna, they marched by Raichore. They arrived on the banks of Kistna on the 6th December. There were only two small boats to ferry them over. The captain of the steam ferry belonging to the G.I.P. Railway for the conveyance of passengers refused to take over the men unless Colonel Knox paid cash for every trip. The consequence was that the corps had to remain in the hot sun, and be ferried across in the two small rait looking boats. One boat upset with two carts of things and the regimental cash chest. They were, however, subsequently taken up. The time allowed for crossing the Kistna is four days, but it is not at all unlikely that the regiment will be a week before it is in fit marching order to proceed.—Madras Mail, Dec. 18.

NEW RETIRING ALLOWANCE.—There is a rumour abroad "based upon the very best authority,"—these rumours always are—to the effect that an offer of pension is actually about to be made to the Senior Officers of the Staff Corps upon these terms:—two hundred pounds sterling after twenty-two years' service, and forty pounds sterling additional for each additional year. Thus an officer of thirty years' service might retire on £200 plus 40 × 8 = 320, total £520. We have no doubt such an offer would induce a great many of the unemployed to retire, provided always that there was no arriere pensee in the fulfilment; no keeping the word of promise to the ear to break it to the sense. In short, no "cribbing" out of the nominal years of service of the time passed on furlough. The service must be gross not net, and from date of first commission. Otherwise the very men who would be most likely to take advantage of the offer, and whose doing so would be the greatest advantage to the State, will be precluded from accepting it at all!—Madras Athenaeum, Dec. 18.

ANOTHER OUTRAGE ON BRITISH SOLDIERS AT BANGALORE.—On Thursday afternoon two soldiers of the 21st Fusiliers were quietly walking through a street close by the Mahomedan quarter. A Mahomedan faquir asked them for alms, and, as our informant, a native, says, in a jocular way, touched one of them with his cane. On this, a stone was thrown at them, and a large crowd of some hundreds of people assembled in a moment, and beat them most severely. They managed to get into the house of a European close by, and waited for half an hour in the hope that the crowd would disperse. The house itself was assailed by volleys of stones. After a time, they left for their barracks, and again a crowd of excited Mahomedans followed, and treated them so severely that they were felled to the ground. Our correspondent—who is quite willing, if called on, to give his evidence—says that he saw no more and left the place, as he could not interfere. We trust the case will undergo strict investigation. If the Mahomedans of Bangalore are so excessively sensitive at the mere sight of a British soldier, the sooner they are taught to endure his presence the better. The men of the Fusiliers have, since their arrival at the station, been as quiet and as well-behaved in every particular as could possibly be desired, and it is a positive disgrace to civil rule in Bangalore that they cannot go into town without being treated with insult and injury. Is it not time to officially inform the particular class of natives in question that it will not do to carry such insult and injury too far? Judging from their demeanour, Mahomedans in these parts appear to have an idea that the British Raj is coming to a close. Would it not be as well to disabuse them of that idea?—Bangalore Herald Dec. 16.

BREAKING THE CAMEL'S BACK.—A correspondent of the Madras Mail writes as follows from Tiunnevely Dec. 9, 1871:—"A few days ago I alluded to the dissatisfaction shown by the native community, in regard to the tax recently imposed on trades and professions. I stated my apprehensions that this feeling was so strong that it might possibly lead to acts of open hostility on the part of the natives, besides giving rise to much grumbling on the part of the European community. I scarcely thought, however, when I penned those lines that my anticipations were likely to be soon verified. I was somewhat surprised when my servants informed me this morning of the news that all the bazaar shops in Palamcottah were closed. On enquiring the reason, I was told that, on the shop-keepers being called upon by the Municipality [?] to pay the tax, they had in a body positively refused to comply with the order, and had as a protest shut their shops, much to the inconvenience of the public, who are thus unable to purchase the ordinary articles of food. Surely it was bad enough to be forced to pay a high price for such articles owing to scarcity, without cutting off the means of procuring them so suddenly altogether! It is a very unsatisfactory and deplorable state of affairs, as whichever side is compelled to yield in the struggle, much bad feeling must be the result. One native, when asked why the shops had been closed, said that 'the men came to the shopkeepers and demanded rupees, which they declined to give, so they closed their shops rather than pay the demand.' Another one made a little complaint that he could not get any salt for his household. Be this as it may, the man who is so fortunate as to possess a few English bottles just now of so very necessary an article is a lucky person. I dare say he will have many calls on his generosity—many appeals to his sympathy. There seems to be an impression amongst the native community that the English Government is at present hard up for money, and have therefore had the recent census taken to facilitate the taxing of the people of this country, as, in their minds, there is an inseparable and necessary connection between the two events. It is therefore to be regretted that the one event so soon followed the other. Of course the natives are very much out in their surmises and cogitations. Government has of late evinced a disposition to waste large sums of money on worthless persons and objects, while at the same time screwing and pinching by petty and vexatious savings, and neglecting really useful and important measures for the benefit of the country at large. I suspect that the inhabitants of the many towns and villages who petitioned the Government to allow them to participate in the benefits of the Municipal Act are now keenly and sorely bewailing the step, as they find that Municipal advantages cannot be enjoyed without entailing heavy charges, and especially as they are uncertain where taxation will end."

TOUR OF INSPECTION.—A salute of 11 guns was fired on Friday morning at Kirkee on the departure of Major-General J. T. Grant, C.B., commanding P.D.A., on the tour of inspection to Asseerghur, Dhoolia, and Malligaum, accompanied by the Assistant Adjutant General of Division.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—We hear of a sad accident having occurred near Belgaum, by which Major H. C. Jones, Invalid Establishment, lost his life. The deceased was out shooting, and by some accident his gun went off, shattering his left hand. It was found necessary to amputate the arm, but he sunk under the operation.

THE OVERLAND MAILS.—The Committee of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce have sent a communication to the Director General of the Post-office protesting against the despatch of the English mail steamer on Monday afternoon from Bombay, as the practical effect of such a change would be to turn Sunday into a working day. The committee suggest that the mail might be despatched at half-past five o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, which they think might be done without inconvenience to the other Presidency towns.

THE LATE CAPTAIN J. WOOD.—The news of the death of Captain John Wood, I.N., the agent in Sind, of the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, has been received in India with great sorrow. At Kotree flags were hoisted half-mast high, and work was suspended for the day.

NEWS FROM BUSHIRE.—Ahmed Nedeem Effendi, Turkish Consul for Bushire, arrived here per B.I.S.N. Co.'s steamer India on Nov. 19 last. A party of sixteen Turkish soldiers, under the command of a non-commissioned officer, arrived at Bushire on Nov. 28, and is supposed to be a guard for the Turkish Consulate. H.M.S. Maggie arrived at Bushire from a cruise on the night of the 25th, and left on the morning of Nov. 30. A light shower of rain fell last night, but not sufficient to moisten the earth for purposes of cultivation. Should this rain delay for another three weeks, all chance of cultivation at Bushire and its environs will be lost. The poor still suffer much from hunger, want of clothing, and exposure, and many of them die daily from famine and disease.

THE PERSIAN FAMINE.—The s.s. Ethiopia, which arrived in Bombay harbour on Saturday last, from the Persian Gulf, has brought some further intelligence of the famine in Persia. Letters from Yezd, dated the 5th ult., state that the country is still in a state of misery, not through want of provisions now, but from want of occupation and scarcity of water. The agriculturists are powerless, traders have no occupation, and money is scarce. The misery of the populace is further enhanced by the severe weather that has set in. Letters from Bunder Abbas, dated the 7th instant, contain distressing accounts of the state of the Zoroastrians (about 500) who have been residing there for the last two months. Fifty have died from exhaustion and disease; the rest will be forwarded to Bombay as soon as the requisite permission from the Persian Governor is obtained.—Times of India, Dec. 23.

MEMORIAL OF THE MANCHESTER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The following Memorial has been addressed to his Grace the Duke of Argyll, Secretary of State for India, and also to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., First Lord of her Majesty's Treasury:—

"The Memorial of the Directors of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, by their Chairman, respectfully sheweth, "That your memorialists are largely associated with the trade and commerce of India, and have always felt a deep interest in the promotion of measures for the development of the great natural resources of that country.

"That the trade and commerce between the United Kingdom and India, is already great and of national importance. That considering the rich natural products of India, its extent of territory and large population, its commerce bears no real proportion to its capabilities for further development.

"That the Government as represented in the Council for India, presents the anomaly of being constituted exclusively of members of the legal profession and of the military and civil services, who from professional bias and association, and the want of mercantile training, cannot be expected to possess the requisite qualifications for the discussion of questions affecting commercial interests.

"That your memorialists have frequently addressed her Majesty's Government, urging the importance of a few members being placed on the Council of India, having practical acquaintance with the trade of India and of Great Britain, and in reply to a memorial, addressed to the present Government, they were given to understand that on the occurrence of vacancies in the Indian Council, a certain number should be filled by persons experienced in commercial pursuits.

"That during the last session of Parliament a motion on this subject, submitted by Mr. Graves, M.P., was withdrawn solely on the assurance made by her Majesty's Government, that, recognising the unanimity of the House of Commons, the wishes of the supporters of the motion should have due weight and consideration.

"That your memorialists recently received an announcement of the retirement of a member of the Council; and it was with surprise and regret that they observed in the same Gazette the appointment of his successor, who, though a gentleman of undoubted ability, they believe has never had any connection with commerce.

"That your memorialists having in recollection the promise made to themselves in response to previous appeals to the Government, and bearing in mind the implied, if not the positive understanding, made with Mr. Graves and the House of Commons in May last, that the commercial element should no longer be excluded from the Council, feel bound to express their grave disappointment that such implied understanding has not been fulfilled; and they would fail in their duty if they did not remark on the haste with which the recent appointment was made.

"Your memorialists therefore pray that in compliance with opinions so widely and influentially entertained, her Majesty's Government will take steps for the early appointment of a due proportion of members on the Council of India, having a practical acquaintance with trade, whereby the commerce of the two countries would obtain efficient representation in the council of the Government.

"And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Miscellaneous.

SUCCESSOR TO SIR S. FITZGERALD.—Some time ago we expressed our disbelief in the report that the Earl of Belmore, who had resigned the Governorship of New South Wales, would succeed Sir Seymour Fitzgerald in the Government of Bombay. It soon became clear that our doubt was well founded, and it is now stated on what we believe to be good authority that Sir Philip Wodehouse, the late able Governor of the Cape Colony, will be Sir Seymour Fitzgerald's successor.—Civil Service Gazette.

THE LIVINGSTONE SEARCH EXPEDITION.—Sir Bartle Frere presided at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday evening, and gave some particulars relating to the proposed Livingstone Search Expedition. The Government having refused to aid in the search for her Majesty's Consul, the Society was compelled to appeal to the public for means whereby an expedition could be properly equipped and despatched. We are glad to learn from Sir Bartle Frere that the response has been hearty; but we are not the less dissatisfied with the decision of the Government. The whole country feels a deep interest in the fate of the missing explorer, and would like to have a share in providing the means for his rescue or relief. If the Government had contributed help every taxpayer would have felt satisfied, and the act would have received universal approval. The expedition will sail for Zanzibar, via the Suez Canal, some time this month.

THE INDIAN MUSEUM.—A plan has been submitted to the Duke of Argyll for the removal of the Indian Museum to South Kensington. This Museum is at present in the India Office, where it occupies much space that is required for official purposes. Its removal to South Kensington would thus be a departmental advantage, and would at the same time facilitate the public inspection of this splendid collection. Want of space is greatly felt in the India Office, where every useful consideration seems to have been sacrificed for architectural effect.—Civil Service Gazette.

ASSAM TEA COMPANY.—A circular, of which the following is a copy, has been sent to the shareholders in the Assam Company:—"East India Avenue, Leadenhall-street, London, Jan. 10.—"Sir,—I am desired by the directors of the Assam Company to acquaint you that the tea-making season of the past year having come to a close, and the accounts received per telegram of the out-turn being such as to lead them to look forward to a favourable result, they have determined to declare an interim dividend of £5 per cent. on the capital of the company. I have the pleasure to send you herewith a warrant for the sum payable to you in respect of your shares.—I am, Sir, &c. (Signed), H. W. WIMSHURST, Secretary."

THE COMING WARRANT.—Coming warrants have so frequently cast delusive shadows before them, that we almost hesitate to give a well-founded report, which says that within the next ten days a warrant regulating the regimental organisation of infantry will appear. According to the rumour, every regiment will have two battalions, the higher numbered regiments being converted into second battalions. If this news should prove correct, half the Army will be in an uproar, and retirements will become more numerous than ever. Till, however, we can obtain positive intelligence that this atrocious measure is to take place, we shall abstain from any further comments.—Naval and Military Gazette.

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.—The committee on the reorganisation of the Artillery, consisting of Sir Richard Airey, Brigadier-General Adye, and Colonel Middleton, has been actively engaged during the past week in collecting evidence. Amongst others, Colonels Domville, Fisher, and Turner, and Majors Dunne and Geary, have been examined. Naturally, Woolwich is in a state of great excitement, and all sorts of reports are current as to what will be the recommendation of the committee. Among other rumours is one that the regiment will be divided into Horse, Field, and Garrison Artillery, having their head-quarters respectively at Aldershot, Woolwich, and Portsmouth, or Plymouth. This is, however, pure speculation.

THE SCIENTIFIC CORPS.—One of Mr. Cardwell's most difficult problems will be to devise some means of inducing young men to enter the Artillery and Engineers, under the new conditions of admission to the rest of the Army. The non-purchase system is no longer a special and distinctive privilege of the Ordnance Regiments; and Artillery and Engineer officers, having to pass through the Woolwich Academy, must pay for the military training which is got for nothing by officers in other branches of the Service. It is clear, therefore, that something will have to be done to restore the attractions of the scientific services, especially as the stagnant state of their promotion is causing such a bad effect among the junior officers of both corps.—Broad Arrow.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following exports of bullion are given in Mr. De Quetteville's Indian Circular of the 4th January:—By the Steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company. From Southampton, per Simla, Dec. 23: Gold—Bombay, £25,754; Ceylon, £1,255; Madras, £3,164; Calcutta, £2,000; Singapore, £10,125; Hong Kong, £3,300. Silver—Bombay, £20,000; Calcutta, £30,000; Penang, £23,000; Singapore, £137,400; Hong Kong, £65,775 (£22,275 shipped by H.M.'s Government); Shanghai, £4,655. Per Ceylon, Dec. 28: Silver—£84,700. Per Candia, Jan. 4, 1872: Gold—Bombay, £5,000; Silver—Penang, £14,400; Hong Kong, £24,870 (shipped by H.M.'s Government); Shanghai, £4,650. The price of silver is quoted as bar, 5s. 0½d. per oz. standard; dollars, 4s. 11d. per oz.; 5 francs, 4s. 10½d. per oz.

DELAY IN BHOOTAN MEDALS.—We take the following from the Broad Arrow:—"Sir,—On the 1st of April, 1871, a G. O. was published authorising the issue of a war medal for the troops engaged in the Bhootan expedition in the year 1865. The 55th regiment, to which I had the honour to belong, was present, and are entitled to the medal. Although rolls were immediately prepared and sent away, yet, up to the present time, we seem as far off from obtaining them as ever. Now the 80th regiment have received theirs some five or six months ago. Perhaps, Mr. Editor, you can give some information respecting the delay, for, indeed, the issue could have been made with quite as much despatch as it was to those engaged in the Abyssinian expedition, more especially as there are so few entitled to it. By inserting this in your valuable paper, it may probably induce the authorities at the War-office to accelerate the issue of them.—ONE ENTITLED TO IT (AND THINKS IT HIGH TIME IT CAME TO THE FRONT, UNLESS THEY ARE SHORT OF SILVER). 1st January, 1872."

THE NON-PURCHASE REGIMENTS.—The Compensation Commissioners, in calculating what sum the officers of the 102nd Fusiliers are entitled to receive for their commissions on retiring from the service, have deducted from the amounts fixed by the regimental scale £106, on account of there being three ensigns short of the establishment.

Seeing that it is totally due to the action of the Government that the three ensigncies in question have not been filled up, the deduction from the regimental scale of the contributions of those officers is as mean and pettifogging an act as we have heard of for some time. The conduct of the commissioners may be within the letter of the law, but it is certainly outside its spirit. We beg to call the attention of Members of Parliament to the discreditable incident, in the hope that some of them may question Mr. Cardwell on the subject during the approaching session. It appears that the Ministry shrink so much from ridicule, that they have gagged the clown, but it does not seem that they shrink from acts which, if not legally dishonest, are morally so.—Naval and Military Gazette.

A NEW PERCUSSION FUZE.—Colonel Milward, C.B., Superintendent of the Royal Laboratory, has designed a new percussion fuze, which has been introduced for use with muzzle-loading rifled field guns. The Globe says that the new fuze is on the principle of that known as the Armstrong C percussion, but differs somewhat in details of construction. It is primed with cap composition instead of amorphous phosphorus, and is furnished with a more perfect arrangement of safety-pin. The fuze has been practically tried by the Horse Artillery during last summer in common and shrapnel shells, the condition of the ground being constantly varied. The shells were fired to graze on water, sand, soft ground, and boggy clay, and into earthworks and gun-pits. Out of a total of 460 rounds there were but thirteen failures, namely, ten blind and three premature. The latter are attributed to the use of a hollow-headed rammer, which has a tendency to grip, and thus loosen the fuze in ramming home. This defect has, however, been obviated by the adoption of solid-headed rammers. The fuze will at first only be issued for M.L. field guns, but in all probability it will ultimately come into use for siege guns, and, in fact, for all projectiles designed to burst on graze.

ARTILLERY EXPERIMENTS.—The Globe understands that a series of experiments will shortly be commenced, under instructions from General Adye, the Director of Artillery, with a view of testing the efficacy of wads for the prevention of the "scoring" or erosion in the bores of heavy muzzle-loading rifled guns. This injury to the bore is due to the mechanical effect of the gas, as it rushes over the upper surface of the projectile. In breechloading-guns, where the windage is altogether closed, by the use of a lead-coated projectile, the scoring is trivial; but in muzzle-loading guns there must always be a space between the upper part of the shot and the upper surface of the bore. On the explosion of the charge the gas rushes at a very high velocity through the opening, and thus little by little wears away the steel tube which forms the barrel of the gun. The object of the present trials is to ascertain practically, by firing a number of rounds, whether the evil will be obviated to any appreciable extent by placing a wad, either of papier-mache or of leather, between the cartridge and the shot. Somewhat similar wads have been in use for some years, but doubts have been raised as to their efficiency. We trust the forthcoming experiments will set the matter at rest.

COTTON GIN TRIALS.—The first series of these interesting and important experiments, which began on the 28th November, was brought to a close on the 23rd ult. A further series will be commenced about the middle of this month, when such machines, including hand-gins also, as may be previously entered, which differ in any respect from those hitherto at work, or which are supposed to possess any improvements will have the opportunity of being tested, and their merits fairly and fully exhibited. The following is the circular sent to the different makers of gins:—"I beg to inform you that the series of cotton-gin trials which commenced on the 28th ult., will be concluded by the 23rd inst., and that it is intended to institute a fresh trial of such gins, either differing from or presenting improvements of those now in course of being tested, as may be entered by the 15th January next, the said gins to be worked either by hand or power. The conditions to be observed at the proposed new trials and the different kinds of cotton to be used on the occasion will be identical with those adopted for the trials now in progress at Messrs. Percival and Patteson's mill, Jersey-street, Ancoats.—(Signed) T. FORBES WATSON, Reporter on the Products of India to the Secretary of State for India in Council. Queen's Hotel, Manchester, Dec. 14, 1871." A growing interest has been manifested by cotton spinners, machinists, and others, since the commencement of the trials, and increased confidence has been felt on the part of all concerned as to the impartiality and fairness with which they are conducted. There can be no doubt that these trials will teach the precise value and the particular defects of every form of gin now in use, will exhibit to manufacturers alike the weak and the strong points of their various contrivances, and, even apart from the improvements to which they may be expected to lead, will enable every grower of cotton to obtain the gin that is best adapted to the peculiarities of his crop and to the demands of his market. Even for those who have no special interest in cotton the trials are well worth seeing, if only on account of the scrupulous accuracy with which they are conducted and of the care with which all sources of error seem to be shut out. Although there is not space for many visitors at a time, no one who has any reasonable claim to admission will be excluded.—Cotton Supply Reporter.

SOLDIERS' DAUGHTERS' HOME, HAMPSTEAD.—On Tuesday night the annual new year's meeting of the friends and supporters of the above named excellent institution (which was established some years ago for the clothing, education, and maintenance of soldiers' daughters, whether orphans or not), and the Christmas treat to the children took place at the Home, Hampstead. Sir George Lawrence presided, and was supported by a numerous company of ladies and gentlemen. The present and former inmates of the Home occupied a prominent position in the room, the bright scarlet uniforms of the inmates, partly covered by white pinafores, giving them a most picturesque appearance. A detachment of the inmates of the neighbouring Sailors' Daughters' Orphan Home were also present. A large number of prizes for proficiency in industrial occupations and school work were distributed by the chairman, who also presented a highly satisfactory report as to the condition and efficiency of the Home with its 151 inmates. Sixteen girls had left during the year to enter domestic service, and two deaths had taken place since the last new year's gathering. The general health of the Home had continued good. The chairman earnestly appealed for increased support for the Home, and encouraging speeches were made by the Revs. G. G. Harvey, B.A., T. Stevenson, M.A., J. Kirkman, M.A. (chaplain of the Home), and Dr. Cooper Roose, the medical officer. Afterwards the fruit from a large Christmas tree was distributed. Great regret was expressed at the absence, through illness, of General Boileau, chairman of the house committee.

THE NEW STEAMSHIP "PESHAWUR."—On Jan. 6 the P. and O. Co.'s new screw steamship Peshawur, commanded by Capt. C. A. White, had her official trial at the measured mile in Stokes Bay, when, under the adverse influence of a strong westerly wind and short, confused seas, she attained an average mean speed of 13.81 knots per hour, one run being made with the wind in four minutes, or fifteen knots per hour. The total weight of coals and stores on board was 275 tons, and the vessel's draught of water was 17ft. 3in. forward and 18ft. 5in. aft.; steam, 46lb.; vacuum, 27 inches; revolutions of engines, 61 per minute. The dimensions of the Peshawur are as follows:—Length between perpendiculars, 378ft.; breadth of beam, 42ft. 9in.; depth from top of floor to spar deck, 33ft. 2in.; register tonnage, 2,103, gross ditto, 3,781. She is fitted with compound engines of 600-horse power nominal, which indicated 2,962 during the trial; diameter of cylinders, 62 and 104 inches; length of stroke, 4ft. 6in.; heating surface of boilers, 11,720 square feet; firegrate surface, 316.8 square feet; condensing surface, 6,059 square feet; diameter of screw, 17ft. 6in., and 4ft. 3in. long, with pitch increasing from 22½ to 24 inches; weight of screw, 12½ tons. The Peshawur was built by Messrs. Caird and Co., of Greenock, and is a sister ship to the Khedive, Mirzapore, and Pekin, by the same builders, which have been added to the company's fleet during the past year. These vessels are all provided with accommodation for a large number of first and second class passengers, mails, specie, baggage, and over 2,000 tons of cargo, and are fitted with the latest improvements in every department. A large number of the P. and O. Co.'s directors and officials and other scientific gentlemen were on board the Peshawur, and her performances gave great satisfaction. The Peshawur left Southampton on Jan. 13, as an extra steamer for Bombay, via the Suez Canal, calling at Malta, Port Said, and Suez, and also taking cargo for transshipment at Bombay to the China steamer, which will proceed through to Shanghai.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has for some time past been engaged in the construction, in the Madras Presidency, of a Canal of great capacity, for the purposes of irrigation and navigation, with subsidiary channels. It has now completed 190 miles of the main Canal, proceeding through the extremely fertile valley of the Koodair to (or near to) the town of Cuddapah; and also of nearly 400 miles of the minor Canals.

The Chief Engineer of the Company, who from his local knowledge and past experience is well fitted to pass an accurate judgment in the matter, has lately given much attention to the question of returns, and he considers that a net revenue of at least 23 per cent. upon the Company's past and intended outlay may be ultimately expected from irrigation and navigation only.

Forms of Application for Shares may now be had at the Company's Offices, 8 and 9, Queen-street-place, Southwark-bridge, London, E.C.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Thousands of instances might be cited in which general debility, low spirits, and nervous irritations, the consequence of dyspepsia or indigestion, have yielded to a short course of this alternative medicine. These Pills soon give tone to the stomach, renovate the digestive powers, purify the blood, and give strength to the whole system. Sluggishness of the body, and depression of the mind are succeeded by a cheerful activity of the physical and mental functions. Indigestion is the parent of so many evils, and is so common, so universal a complaint, that it is a great blessing such a remedy as this invaluable medicine should have been discovered. No one need long suffer from indigestion with these Pills at hand.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)
CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—“Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed.”

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—“Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not ‘supply a want and fill a place.’”

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—“So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases.”

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words “Dr. J. Collis Browne” on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Sole Manufacturer, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London. Sold in bottles at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. Wholesale Agents for Sydney—Messrs. ELLIOTT, BROTHERS. Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Dec. 30; Agra and Madras, Dec. 28; Calcutta, Dec. 27.

By the latest accounts from Delhi the whole of the troops told off for the winter manœuvres had arrived in their respective camps. The troops in the 3rd Division under Sir Henry Tombs had already begun their preliminary parades, which came off twice a day for two or three hours at a time. An assault of arms was ordered for the 5th and 6th January. The whole force under canvass consists of nine batteries of Royal Artillery, three regiments of British and seven of native horse, six of British and twelve of native foot, with eight companies of Sappers and Miners, making up a total of seven thousand Europeans, eleven thousand natives, and fifty-four guns distributed into three divisions of three brigades each. The ground was still "very heavy and sticky," especially in the camps of Generals McMurdo and Tombs which have been pitched on ploughed fields. Soon after Lord Mayo's arrival the 2nd and 3rd Divisions were to march northwards for exercise towards Badli-ke-Serai, the scene of Barnard's first victory in 1857 over the Delhi Mutineers. The 1st Division were encamped on grassy and undulating ground close to the far-famed Ridge of Delhi where Barnard's soldiers took up the position they held so stubbornly throughout the siege. The unusual gathering of troops for mimic warfare has of course filled the native imagination, always lively enough, with all kinds of strange surmises. The natives, we are told, look on these great preparations as the prelude to some real game of war. Who ever heard, they ask, of so many troops being gathered from distant stations merely for a course of peaceful parades? Had such camp been formed yearly for some time past in various parts of India, there would be no excuse for asking such questions. We can only hope that the movement thus begun will be repeated so regularly that the natives will in time cease to regard it as a cloak for something else.

THE latest tidings received at Bombay from the Loshai Expedition were dated the 24th December. On the day before General Bouchier with the Cachar Column had occupied Kolell, a hill-village more than 4,000 feet high, and about forty-three miles from Tipai Mukh. A small body of the savages had made a show of disputing the passage of the Tipai at its junction with the Toweeboon, but they retired without firing a shot, until our troops came within sight of Kolell. Here they fired a volley, which killed two sepoys of the 44th, and wounded a constable and two men of the 22nd N.I. How many of the savages were disabled in their retreat, it was found impossible to ascertain for the steepness of the hills and the denseness of the jungle; but the traces of blood on the way seemed to tell of no small damage done. The Chittagong Column under General Brownlow had reached a place called Vanoonah on the 24th December, lying at a height of 3,000 feet above the sea, somewhere beyond the Rai Jan Klang range. Here again there is some confusion of names, dates, or places, because under last issue we mentioned the capture of Vanoonah's village as achieved by Colonel Macpherson on the 15th. Perhaps the later date refers to another village belonging to the same chief. The same Column is said to have destroyed three large villages and also "large stores of rice." The latter feat seems hardly credible, unless it was found impossible to carry away the supplies of an article so necessary for our native troops. General Brownlow's advance seems to have been so far unchecked by human hindrances, for we hear of only one Ghoorka being killed in an ambuscade. The weather of an evening was cold, but the health of the troops continued excellent, although neither officers nor men had regular tents to shelter them.

A Times telegram of January 15, from Calcutta, describes General Bouchier's column as being on the 12th in latitude 24, longitude 93. The General reported "all well" on his side. On January 10 the Right Column, under General Brownlow, was still only one march beyond the Syloo Village of Savoonga, a statement not quite in keeping with the previous telegrams, which described the column as advancing eastward from Savoonga on the 4th, and still moving up to the 7th. Colonel Macpherson has again succeeded in storming a Loshai village, which is said to have been strongly stockaded. One of his brave little Ghoorkas was killed, and nine men with one officer, the first yet touched in this war, wounded.

WE are glad to see that some little regard on account of past services has been shown to Mr. Roberts, the suspended Magistrate of Calcutta. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal has softened the effect of his late blow by appointing Mr. Roberts Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery.

THE thanks of the Indian Government have, we are glad to note, been formally bestowed on Major General Sir F. Goldsmid for his settlement of the boundary dispute between Persia and Makran. Colonel Pollock and Dr. Bellew have gone to Kandahar to aid Sir F. Goldsmid in settling the Seistan frontier between Persia and Afghanistan.

MAJOR GENERAL BROWNLOW, commanding the Right Column of the Loshai Expedition, has been appointed to the Mooltan Brigade, the command of which he will assume at the end of the present campaign. Mr. John Pitt Kennedy has been appointed a Puisne Judge of the Calcutta High Court in the room of the late Mr. Justice Norman. Major Sladen's re-appearance as a Deputy Commissioner of the 2nd Grade in British Burmah settles the question of his immediate future, how far in harmony with his just expectations we cannot pretend to say. We are glad to hear however that Lord Mayo has gracefully appointed him to accompany the King of Siam on special duty during his Indian tour.

AFTER visiting the Delhi Camp Lord Mayo was to take his long desired trip to British Burmah, embarking for Rangoon on the 25th of this month in Admiral Cockburn's Flag Ship, Glasgow. After a stay of five days in Rangoon his Excellency will go on to Maulmain and the Andaman Islands. Thence he will cross over to Orissa, where he will meet Mr. Campbell during a tour of three days. He is expected to return to Calcutta about the middle of February.

A GRAND Durbar was held at Rajkote on the 27th December, at which the Nawab of Joonaghur was invested with the Order of the Star of India. Another Feudatory, the Gaikwar of Baroda, is about to follow the example set by Jeypore and Gwalior, and set up a Legislative Council for himself. Meanwhile his Highness has just been showing his loyal sympathy with the Queen by distributing Rs. 50,000 in alms on account of the improvement reported in the health of the Prince of Wales. He is also about to pay Bombay a visit.

ACCORDING to the Gazette of India there is no further excuse for doubt as to the intentions of the Indian Government with regard to the State Railway from Agra to the Sambhur Lake. This line, we are now assured, is to be constructed, not only for the easier conveyance of salt from the Sambhur Lake to British territory, but also as "an important section of a railway which should eventually traverse Rajpootana, and unite with the existing railways of the Bombay Presidency." It is to be a narrow-gauge line of course. Of the nineteen tenders received, only two exceeded 35½ lakhs of rupees, or say £353,000. The tender accepted is Mr. Glover's for Rs. 25,44,181, which includes maintenance for two years, but no rolling-stock, sleepers, or English materials, which will be supplied by Government. It is reckoned that the whole line of 185 miles may be "completed and stocked well within £5,000 per mile." Estimates for the extension from Sambhur junction to Nusseerabad are to be sent in without delay.

AT the last meeting of the Viceroy's Legislative Council the report of the Committee on the Brahmo Marriage Bill was brought up; so we may expect soon to hear that the Bill which has so long exercised the different Brahminist bodies has become law. Mr. Campbell has been brought on the Select Committee for regulating the procedure of the ordinary Criminal Courts in India. His speech in favour of bringing British-born subjects under these courts will scare many people who look on trial by jury as their "Palladium."

CALCUTTA telegrams of the 18th January give an alarming account of a serious outbreak near Loodianah. It appears that a body of Kukas, the new sect of Sikh fanatics, whose outrages on Mohammedan butchers in the Punjab were so promptly punished last autumn, attacked a fort, which the telegrams call Malod, killing two men, and wounding a Sirdar or chief. Prompt measures however were taken to quell an outbreak which might else have grown to a formidable head. Troops were forwarded at once from Delhi, and the native chiefs of Nabha and Patialah are said to have given effective aid. According to one account, a hundred of the Kukas were slain, and according to another, seventy more were taken prisoners. Every effort is being made to hunt down the leaders, and we are invited to believe that the rising has been completely suppressed. Unluckily, the same assurance was given us with regard to the previous outrages in Lahore and Umritsir. Let us hope that this time it will prove true. From the bare outline of events sketched in the telegrams, we are tempted to suppose that these Kuka fanatics took advantage of the withdrawal of so many regiments from the Punjab to Delhi, to raise the standard of a new revolt against our rule. Happily, however, the railway runs all the way from Delhi to Lahore, and the sudden mischief has been promptly nipped in the bud.

MALOD, the scene of the Kuka rising, appears to be a town belonging to one of the Sikh chiefs in the Cis Sutlej province of Sirhind, the old fighting-ground of India's successive conquerors, and the chief seat of the later Sikh dominion. It lies not far from Loodianah, on the road from Umballa to Ferozepore. According to a still later telegram, we are glad to see that the Kuka leader, who turns out to be Ram Singh himself, has been caught and forwarded under a strong guard to Allahabad. A Times telegram of the same date announces the arrest of some other Kuka leaders on the 17th, and the execution of forty-nine Kukas. None of the troops despatched from Delhi were engaged.

ACCORDING to the latest telegrams from Calcutta, Sir Philip Wodehouse, the Governor-Elect of Bombay, had arrived in Calcutta on a visit to Lord Mayo. The King of Siam, after a week's stay in the City of Palaces, was to go up-country on Monday, the 22nd instant, taking the Camp of Exercise on his way to Lucknow, Agra, and Bombay, whence his Majesty would return some time in February to Calcutta, on his way home again.

THE next open competition for entrance into the Indian Civil Service commences on the 19th March; candidates should send in their application to the Civil Service Commissioners by the 1st of February.

WE are requested to state that the examination for the Indian Medical Service to be held on the 12th February, 1872, will take place at Burlington House.

IN his speech to his constituents last Monday, Professor Fawcett made some indignant remarks on the complete exclusion of India from the speeches lately made in public by his brother statesmen, more especially by Mr. Grant Duff the Under Secretary for India. We certainly own to having shared Mr. Fawcett's surprise at the total silence observed the other day by the member for Elgin in respect of a subject which ought, one fancies, to hold the first place in his thoughts. Perhaps however Mr. Grant Duff said nothing, because he felt perfectly satisfied that he had nothing particular to say about a distant country containing only two hundred millions of black people, who give their rulers no trouble and supply our markets with an increasing amount of tea and cotton. Besides it was only natural that a statesman who had been bored with all kinds of Indian business from February to August should turn his attention in December to topics more generally attractive for English readers. India is a big country, but it lies away from the ordinary English ken, and if our legislators themselves are wont to shirk so remote a topic, is it strange that the multitude should follow suit? As the member for Brighton truly observed:—

The most trumpery question that was ever brought before Parliament, a wrangle about the purchase of a picture, a squabble about the making of a road through St. James's Park, a quarrel about the claims of rival architects, seem to excite more attention in Parliament than the welfare of a hundred and eighty millions of our Indian fellow-subjects.

Of course they do, and did long before Burke remarked that private troubles come much closer home to one's mind than public misfortunes, or something to that effect. Poor Mr. Fawcett may complain as loudly as he will of the tendency of successive governments to sacrifice Indian interests to England's convenience; but people who take things more philosophically will rather feel surprised that India has not suffered more from that same tendency. What indeed is the good of having so bright a jewel in the British Crown, if we cannot turn it to some pecuniary account? Economy begins at home, and the comfort of the English taxpayer must be considered first, even if we thereby entail new burdens on our fellow-subjects in the East.

It would not be respectable or perhaps safe to bleed the latter on two grand a scale; we shake our heads over the lordly peculations of a Verres; but if we can make India pay handsomely for every soldier imported from England, or contribute more than her right share to the carriage of our foreign mails, so much the better for ourselves. Après nous le deluge. Really Mr. Fawcett is too unreasonable.

A BOMBAY telegram reports much damage done by heavy floods in Java.

THE next overland mail from India via Brindisi will be due here on Monday, the 29th inst. It is the first of the mails which were to leave Bombay on Mondays instead of Saturdays

DEATH OF MR. FREEMAN.—We regret to have to announce the death of Mr. John Dawes Freeman, who has for several years past filled, with great credit to himself and satisfaction to his department, the office of Shipping Master and Emigration Agent at this port. Mr. Freeman had been suffering from a severe illness for some time past, and his death was not altogether unexpected. He died on Christmas-day at his residence at Bandora, and yesterday evening (Dec. 29) his remains were followed to their last resting place at the Roman Catholic Chapel there by a large number of relatives and friends, by whom he was held in high regard for his many estimable qualities. Since the commencement of Mr. Freeman's last illness the work of the office has been carried on by his deputy, Mr. W. H. Walker, whose intimate acquaintance with the Shipping Master's duties may seem to point him out as Mr. Freeman's most eligible successor.

SCHOOL PRIZES.—In continuation of G.O. 231 of 1870, H.E. the C. in C. desires that the money therein authorised to be drawn annually for schools of British batteries and regiments shall not be disbursed in cash, but be expended, whenever practicable, in the purchase of suitable prizes. Should it be desired to obtain these from England, the amount may be temporarily borrowed from the canteen fund.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—At a General Court-martial at Morar, on Oct. 24, 1871, Private Michael Ryan, 1st battalion 11th regiment, was charged with having, on Sept. 22, 1871, been drunk, and with insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, at Morar, on Sept. 22, 1871, struck with his clenched fist Corporal George Lee, of the 1st battalion 11th regiment. The Court found the prisoner guilty of both the charges, and sentenced him to suffer penal servitude for the term of five years, and further to be discharged with ignominy from her Majesty's service, and also to be marked with the letters B.C.—At a General Court-martial at Dugshaie, on Sept. 22, 1871, Private James Hayes, of the 85th regiment L.I., was charged with having, at Dugshaie, on Aug. 15, 1871, been drunk—with having, at Dugshaie, on Aug. 16, 1871, while a prisoner in confinement, left his confinement before he was set at liberty by proper authority—and with insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, at Dugshaie, on Aug. 16, 1871, used violence against Corporal Thomas Murney, of the 85th regiment, by striking him on the head and wounding him over the eyebrow. The Court found the prisoner guilty of all three charges, and first sentenced him to suffer penal servitude for the term of five years. That sentence having been sent back for revision, the Court revoked its former sentence, and sentenced the prisoner to suffer penal servitude for a term of ten years; and further to be discharged with ignominy from her Majesty's service.

SHAW'S VISIT TO EASTERN TURKISTAN.—II.

At last, on the 25th November, 1868, Mr. Shaw's party set out from Shahidoolla on their way to the capital of Yakoob Beg. Their course still lay down the Karakash valley, which grows narrower and more rocky beyond Shahidoolla. The third day's march through a tremendous gorge where the stream was frozen into a torrent of ice brought them in sight of the great rolling plains of Eastern Turkistan. The felt tents of the Kirghiz, in which they were henceforth to find comfortable shelter, answered closely to the description given of them by Marco Polo. Signs of increasing verdure once more refreshed the travellers' eyes. Still for four days after emerging from the highlands they had to march westward over a mere desert relieved by a few belts of cultivated land. On the fifth day however they entered on a broad plain full of villages and green with tillage all the way from Kargalik to Yarkand; tall sign-posts marking the line of road at intervals of nearly five miles. The people going to market at Kargalik reminded Mr. Shaw of an English market-day in everything but their dress. Everywhere he came on little hamlets of two or three houses in a group, while the presence of trees and water-courses made up for the want of hedges. Everywhere he found the rainless country kept green and fruitful by careful irrigation. The look of well-doing among all classes of the people struck him as the main difference between a Yarkandi and an Indian town. Now too for the first time he saw the Bactrian or two humped-camel used as a beast of burden, and an arabah or covered cart mounted on high wheels and drawn by three horses, "a far superior turn out to the common cart of India" with its solid wooden disks for wheels, and its bullock's straggling right and left of its clumsy pole, "their tails twisted by the half naked coolie who squats between them with his knees in his face."

The respect which the Yarkandi officials paid to the one English stranger, in whose honour the roads were mended and the water-courses bridged, was mingled with evident misgivings as to the object of his journey. With the Yoozbashee, his official guardian, a young, lively, and intelligent Toorkee, Mr. Shaw got on very pleasantly, each laughing at the other's mistakes in trying to speak a strange language, and both taking a hearty interest in each other's doings. "As full of fun as a school-boy home for the holidays," the Yoozbashee kept the whole party alive with his jokes. When the two friends managed to understand each other, he would poke Mr. Shaw in the ribs or pretend to pull him off his horse, laughing heartily. When Mr. Shaw took his fancy with some description of life in his own country, he would hold up his finger at him, "shaking his head with a smile, and saying, 'Ah, Shaw Sahib,' in a voice that implied, 'You, Frangs, are certainly leagued with Shaitan.'" In spite of his turn for practical jokes, he was "a perfect gentleman in manners," seemed to be a general favourite especially with his own servants, and Mr. Shaw regarded him "quite as a friend, a feeling that one can never have towards a native of India." That last remark is open to dispute, but perhaps Mr. Shaw was unlucky in his Indian experiences. The Yoozbashee initiated his friend in the exciting but rather perilous game of "ooghlak," in which none but skilled horsemen like the Kirghiz can hope to excel. The headless body of a goat being thrown on the ground, everyone tries to pick it up without leaving the saddle. He who picks it up first is chased by the others. Tearing across country at full speed, they wrestle with each other for the prize. Sometimes the holder of it, if hard pushed, throws it in front of his pursuers, tripping up their horses as they go. Mr. Shaw saw one pony turn a complete summersault, but both horse and rider were soon in full pursuit again. In these rough games you have to trust a good deal to your steed, but the Torkee horses seldom made a mistake. In the evening Mr. Shaw was often invited to a tamasha in the Yoozbashee's own rooms. The tamasha generally consisted of dancing and guitar playing, which had, on the whole, "a soothing and somnific effect." Of eating and drinking Mr. Shaw had more than he cared for. At each town the Governor rode out a few miles with his retinue to meet him, bringing a dastar-khân or dinner for the whole party. Another dastar-khân awaited him on his departure from each town, until he got quite frightened at the very name of the thing.

In Yarkand, where he stayed some weeks, Mr. Shaw, like Marco Polo, found many persons suffering from goutre. In talking with a Torkee official he was a little surprised to hear that the Torkees claimed descent from "Yapit," that is, Japhet. On the same authority he learned still more, we fancy, to his surprise, that the Chinese were children of Shem. His informant's notions on the latter point may be dismissed at once; but the grounds for ascribing a Japhetic or Aryan origin to some, at least, of the Torkee races, are less weak than they seem at first sight. On this subject Mr. Shaw has an interesting chapter in the early part of his book. The men of Yarkand in fact, "have a decidedly Aryan look." They are tall and rather gaunt, with long-shaped faces, well-formed noses, and full beards; very different in short to the stunted Kirghiz, whose bodily type is unmistakably Mongolian. Mr. Shaw regards them as Tartarized Aryans, descended in great measure from the old Aryan population of those parts, large traces of whom may still be found among the Tajiks of Western Turkistan, and their Aryan kinsmen of Badakshan. In another chapter Mr. Shaw gives a useful summary of the recent history of Eastern Turkistan down to the latest conquests of Yakob Beg, now known as the Atalik Ghazi or "Tutor of the Champions," whose sway extends over Yarkand, Kashgar, and Kuen.

From Yarkand our traveller made his way to Kâshgar, the second capital of Eastern Turkistan, through tracts of sand—his journey relieved by frequent breadths of cultivation. Here at last he had his first interview with the King himself, to whose presence he passed through a gaily dressed crowd of soldiers and citizens formed into an avenue about a quarter of a mile long. The King received him with friendly courtesy, as "after the 'Lord Sahib,'" that is the Viceroy of India, and was surprised to hear that he was a smaller personage than the Queen of England. Mr. Shaw was bidden to enjoy himself for a few days, see all the sights, and make the place his home. At his home it was destined to be for many weeks, under so careful a watch and ward of the King's officers, that he seldom ventured to go far from his place of abode. He employed his time however as well as he could in studying the many strange scenes around him and picking up information which renders the account of his detention at Kâshgar not the least interesting part of the book. Mr. Shaw found among other things that before his arrival the people of those parts had "no idea of the British dominion in India." To them their greatest neighbour was the ruler of Cashmere, and the Indian merchants who came from Ladâk had always for various reasons been afraid to deceive them. It was not till Messrs. Shaw and Hayward came to Kâshgar, that the Kâshgar officials realised the fact of a paramount English power in India. Hayward, from whom he heard but whom at this time, he never saw, took his imprisonment much less kindly than Mr. Shaw, and came to think as ill of his Toorkee host as he had once thought well of him. At length, after one or two more interviews with Yakob Beg, Mr. Shaw was finally dismissed with friendly assurances and presents in the month of April, 1869. On his way home he had a very narrow escape from being swept away or crushed to death through the melting of a glacier while he was fording the Shayok river. A final chapter on the physical features, the manners and customs of the country where he had spent so many months, closes a work full of fresh and varied interest on a subject practically new to most readers.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Your readers will be much gratified to learn that nothing could exceed the joy with which the news of the improvement in the health of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was received throughout India. It was indeed general, spontaneous, and enthusiastic, affording a striking proof, not only of the attachment of the natives to the Heir Apparent, but also of their deeply-felt sympathy for that Royal and illustrious lady who, although necessarily precluded from cheering them by her benign and august presence, is not the less known and endeared to them by her many virtues, of which none shine forth so conspicuously as her devotedness to the memory of her departed Consort, the late Prince Albert.

For all Englishmen who are the friends of good order, and firmly attached to the existing institutions of their fatherland, the providential recovery of his Royal Highness, as well as the rejoicings it has elicited in far Ind, is in the highest degree satisfactory, frustrating, as it does, the criminal hopes of those demagogues who flatter themselves that, under a Republican mask, they can conceal the hideous features of Communism; just as it will be found in India to give the coup de grace to that insane faction the members of which imagine that, by secret cabals and private assassinations, they shall be able to overthrow an Empire which forms the brightest jewel that sparkles in the British crown. Now, Sir, as it is a time-honoured English custom that, on all occasions of public rejoicings, the poor and needy should come in for a share of that good cheer which is so important an element in such festivities, so it is to be hoped that his Grace the Duke of Argyll, than whom a better friend to India and Indians does not exist, may be pleased to direct that, in like manner, some little addition in the way of creature comforts, or to use a less polite, but more expressive term—belly-timber (beef and pork, of course, excepted) be allowed to such of my poor and forlorn countrymen, both Hindoos and Mahomedans, who are the inmates of "The Stranger's Home," an institution founded in 1856 by the munificent aid of the then Court of Directors of the East India Company, and inaugurated in person by her Majesty's illustrious Consort, the late Prince Albert.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

SYED ABDOOLAH.

THE STATE RAILWAYS, WHEN ARE THEY COMING?

The Times of India, re-echoing the Observer, asks :—Where are the State railways, when are we to see them, how much has been expended on them already? Such are the queries put, and somewhat roughly, by a vigorous weekly contemporary in Calcutta. Probably we shall shortly see the Observer get its answer through some demi-official channel. The young journal will be treated to some withering sarcasm—be told that it knows more of metaphysics than mathematics, and that none but a new fledged competition-walla would write as if constructing a few thousand miles of railway were as easy a task as a single season's military campaign. No doubt that for the first two years State railway expenditure must be "enormous" compared with the visible results (our contemporary ought to have made a guess at the aggregate amount spent in salaries); and there will necessarily have been much friction and waste of energy and in the work of "organization"—word dear to bureaucrats. Perhaps we can appreciate as well as any outsiders the nature and extent of unseen effort put forth in the way of surveys, collection of statistics, drawing up detailed plans and specifications, and, not least of all, preliminary arrangements for the purchase and shipping of stores. We have made the very most of the scanty information fitfully given forth as to the progress supposed to be making in this subterranean State railway department; we have chronicled the appointments for the different projects as they have been made and unmade; we have announced that such and such a scheme was commenced, and rejoiced in being able to state that the "staking out" or final surveys have been completed for the Carwar and the Indore lines. More than two years have elapsed since the department got fairly into swing; and, in common with many more, we think the New Year ought to see published, some concise, but tolerably complete statement of the work done, monies expended, and contracts entered into by this untried, extensive, and highly responsible department.

THE INVALIDING OF SOLDIERS.

The Bombay Gazette readily admits that very much has been done towards ameliorating the pernicious effect of an Indian climate, and more particularly of Indian habits, on the health of our soldiers; but on the subject of invaliding, and the immense value (that is peculiarly potent in India) of change of air and scene for sickly and convalescent men, very much more advance is needed, and very many more opportunities should be afforded for obtaining such a boon. A soldier under present arrangements has but one opportunity a year to get home or to the hills. He must, in fact, get sick at a certain time, and, if he should not carry out such an extraordinary expectation, he must fight single-handed with his disease, lie in the regimental hospital, and live in the very place that has already proved unsuitable and deleterious to his constitution for the intervening months until the annual invaliding season. How many lives could, humanely speaking, have been saved, if regimental medical officers were permitted to send men for "change" at the time they considered it advisable? How many diseases would have been unconfirmed? How many invalids saved? These are questions that bear reflection, and we shall not, we are sure, be thought unreasonable or ridiculous by saying—they should be answered. That measures might be taken to establish, say at Calcutta, Bombay, and Kurrachee, floating sanatoria is not a romantic idea. The very troopships themselves, idle for a season, would become available; the railway communication throughout India puts the difficulty of transport very much on one side, and but little is wanted to place the glorious benefit of sea-air within the reach of our sickly army. That such an arrangement would be of service, the Medical Department know full well, and so do the invalids themselves. Look at the fever-stricken patient from the dry up-country climate, after he has seen and smelt the sea for a few days, and you find his eye brighten, his skin moist, and his heart joyful. Every hour, even on his journey, that he neared the coast he improved, and what you feared would prove a trying and even doubtful trip has become a restorative, and perhaps curative agent. Why should matters prove different in civil and military life? We say they would not, if tried, and who has ever thought of suggesting an annual invaliding season, or any particular month in the year, for change of air to the sick civilian or Government servant? Who amongst our medical friends would care about taking the responsibility of detaining a patient nine, ten, or eleven months, when he considered change of air and scene absolutely necessary for recovery? Who then is the responsible party in the case of a sick soldier?

THE PURCHASE OF FRENCH INDIA.

The Madras Times holds that :—Of the possessions of France, Pondicherry is the most important. This place is distant from the capital of the Madras Presidency but seventy miles, and borders on some of our most important districts. It is also as regards climate salubrious in the extreme. These considerations of themselves are weighty in favour of the purchase; but they comprise but a small portion of the grounds for making the territory our own. It should be borne in mind, in the first place, that the town of Madras is in a position exceedingly open to attack, and little capable of defence. Our old fort, with its crumbling walls on the land side, would simply subside if a cannonade were to take place from its battlements, and the whole place with Black Town could be shelled from the sea, and made a heap of ruins in the space of a few hours. Of this we presume no one can entertain a doubt, supposing a few ironclads were to get into our roads in the absence or, in spite of, any opposing naval force of our own. It is then very desirable that there should be no port or territory along the sea-board of this coast belonging to another country, in which a hostile force could find shelter or land. A body of men landed at Pondicherry might do us a great deal of serious harm if supported at sea by a squadron; and might, if assisted by simultaneous risings among the population against us in various quarters even sack this large and wealthy town of Madras. It is hardly possible in these days of surprises and rapid execution of military enterprises to conjecture anything which can be said to be an impossibility, and certainly there is nothing in this conjecture, supposing Pondicherry to be in the hands of a strong naval and military power in alliance with other nations against us, at all improbable. Then again the French possessions, but especially Pondicherry, are inconvenient to us as centres of smuggling operations carried on to the detriment of our revenue. To put a stop to these we have to maintain a watch and ward on our frontier which leads to considerable expense annually, and is not after all altogether effective in fulfilling the object in view. We should, therefore, undoubtedly save a considerable sum each year by becoming the possessors of these small strips of land, and the purchase money would then be made up to us in a few years' time. There is also much loss occasioned to us by the facilities afforded to persons who wish to cheat the revenue, in the position of Pondicherry on the sea coast. It is asserted, and we doubt not with perfect truth, that great quantities of poppy finds its way into the place, and being converted into opium, is exported in that shape to our loss, the customs duty being of course avoided. Thus we see that these small territories however insignificant as compared with those belonging to Great Britain are of value to her in more ways than one, and will tend, if secured to the country, to make our dominion in the East more compact, and to strengthen our hands both in peace and war. It is to be hoped, therefore, that a parsimonious policy at home will not enable another foreign power to hoist its flag in India.

MR. STEPHEN'S PROBABLE SUCCESSOR.—It would not greatly surprise us, nor some of our readers perhaps, to hear that Mr. I. T. Prichard was to be selected for the post of Law Member, in the Viceroy's Council. It is surely no disparagement to the names of Macaulay, Maine, and Stephen to couple with them that of a trained lawyer and versatile thinker, who adds to his other qualifications the advantage of a long and intimate experience in Indian ways and traditions. Perhaps few English gentlemen connected with India can boast of so thorough an acquaintance, not with the mere outside or the show places, but with the very holes and corners of Indian life. Any excess of knowledge in that direction would soon be compensated by a little more experience of high official ways and needs. That Mr. Prichard will get the place, we cannot say; but his chances we have reason to look upon as very good.—Home News.

SIR WILLIAM MUIR'S TOUR.—A letter dated Banda, Bundelkund, the 21st December, gives the following information :—"His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, N. W. P., left this morning for Muttound, the next encamping ground. At the durbar held yesterday I would divide his Honour's address into three parts, 1st—Education; 2ndly—Infanticide; 3rdly—On the necessity of the feeder road between Banda and Manickpore Railway Station being macadamised. Thousands of petitions have been presented to his Honour, praying for a remission of the revenue on account of the failure of the khureef crops for want of rain. In the evening a dinner was given by the magistrate and collector of the district, Mr. E. B. Thornhill, at the Nawab's Tank, to his Honour and Lady Muir and family. About sixty ladies and gentlemen sat down at the repast. The band of the 15th Madras Native Infantry enlivened the evening by 'discouraging sweet music.' The post prandial treat was a display of fireworks provided by the banking firm of Seith Kishen Chund and Brother. In my letter of the 16th instant I mentioned that Seith Sama Kurrun had also subscribed for the fireworks; it appears, however, that although he consented to defray half the expenses, the banking firm of Kishen Chund determined to pay the entire cost, and would not consent to divide the honour with another. I must not forget to state that the illumination at the Nawab's Tank was really a grand and imposing spectacle, and it reflects great credit on the Deputy Collector and Deputy Magistrate, Ahmed Hossein Khan, who had the management of the affair. Three sides of the tank were illuminated in four rows with fifty thousand chiraghs; the fourth side being kept dark for the display of fireworks. Thousands of spectators were present, and all went home at 10 P.M. after enjoying 'a jolly evening.' The police arrangements were admirable. The fireworks were acknowledged by all to be really excellent."—Delhi Gazette, Dec. 25.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

LEFT COLUMN, CAMP TIPAI MOOKH, Dec. 16th.—You will see by the heading of this letter that we have at last reached our base of operations, and that there is every chance of an advance at an early period. People at a distance are apt to imagine that little is being done on account of the slow pace at which the force creeps along. In this jungle-covered country, where every inch of the way has to be opened out through trackless forests, a large body of men in one place are simply an incumbrance; and it becomes absolutely necessary to distribute the troops along the whole line of advance, those in rear giving the finishing touches to roads and other works commenced by the leading corps. Our march in consequence resembles a worm's method of progression, every limb being dragged up in succession as the head pushes slowly on. To mass the whole force in one place would therefore be absurd, not to say impossible. The guns arrived yesterday by water under a small escort, but the rest of the battery with their elephants are still at Camp No. 2, and likely to remain there some time longer till the road is made passable. The rest will do the cattle all the good in the world, after their exertions as far as Mynadthur. One elephant belonging to the commissariat stuck in the mud and could not be extricated. The poor beast remained for three days in the spot where it fell, and a large mound now marks its grave. The artillery were more fortunate: one of their elephants slipped over the side of the hill, and came down with a tremendous crash through the bamboos, but luckily he kept the right end up and escaped with a severe shaking. The gunners who came up by water had rather hard work getting their boats over the rapids. After leaving Mynadthur, the river presents a succession of long still pools full of snags and drift timber, varied by occasional rapids and shallows, up which the boats must be dragged by main force. The scene presented in one of these places by the passage of a convoy of boats is exciting in the extreme, towing ropes snapping, mangees screaming, boats breaking wildly away, and hobbling madly up and down in the strong current,—lucky indeed if they manage to avoid the rocks or the still more dangerous trunks of trees anchored by their roots in mid-stream, with their forked limbs just protruding above the surface of the water. The only boats adapted for the navigation of these waters are the long narrow craft known as dugouts, or trunks of large trees hollowed out by fire, with the sides built up of one or two planks. The Bengal boats are too broad and short, and in most cases are undermanned, the majority of the mangees having succeeded in giving their captors the slip. Their hatred of this work is great. To travellers by water the contrast between the noise and confusion of the rapids and the solemn stillness of the deep pools is very striking. A deep, still stream continued between perpendicular walls of rock, with occasional patches of sand and shingle, off which a huge alligator will glide silently as the sound of the oars rouses him from his slumbers; steep tilas covered with dense vegetation rising abruptly from the water's edge, and troops of chattering monkeys playing amongst the branches which overhang the glassy depths beneath them—such are the common objects by the riverside. Other signs of life there are none, although every inch of ground along the shore is covered with tracks of wild beasts—elephants, tigers, and barking deer being the most common, with now and then the spoor of the metna or bison. Somehow or other, the beasts themselves are rarely seen, and there is nothing to reward the most ardent sportsman, save kalij pheasants and jungle-fowl, which abound in the thorny thickets which fringe the bank. The telegraph is now open as far as No. 4 Camp; it speaks volumes for the energy and skill exhibited by the officers of the department who have had the construction of the line; unfortunately their work is now at a stand-still, owing to the action of the civil authorities at Sylhet in stopping the navigation of the Barak on account of the cholera outbreak among Hidayat Ali's coolies. All traffic on the river has been suspended, and thousands of maunds of stores of every kind, commissariat, telegraph, &c., have been delayed in consequence. I regret to announce that fresh cases of cholera are reported from the Kala Rokha Camp. The sooner the survivors are sent back to their homes the better. There is not one man amongst the whole batch of the hill coolies who has not been admitted into hospital for some complaint or other; and the whole lot are so enfeebled by sickness as to be utterly unfit for work, and are, moreover, completely demoralized by terror. In the meantime, the operations of the column are seriously crippled for want of carriage, as we are deprived of the services of eight hundred men who would probably have turned out to be our most useful coolies, if proper care had been taken of them from the outset. A strong protest was, I believe, made against the manner in which they were crowded on board the transports; but no notice was taken of it. Our principal amusement here in our few leisure moments is fishing; the river swarms with mahaseer, and there are some glorious rapids; still our efforts are hardly rewarded with success, as the fish seem utterly to despise flies, and turn up their noses at the most crafty arrangements of bait. A few have been captured with allah, and some futile attempts have been made to lay out night lines; but as the bait consists of commissariat beef, the fish wisely eschew it. The General and staff left this yesterday to prospect on ahead. The road is reported good. The 44th are just in. The last news relating to the operations is that the Manipore Contingent have been directed to establish a series of posts from the neighbourhood of Moirung westward, and at Moirung as base to organize a force to hold the Eastern tribes in check. The troops continue healthy, although there is a certain amount of dysentery and fever, especially amongst the coolies.—Pioneer Correspondent.

A private letter from Tipai Mukh, dated Dec. 17, informs us that Dr. Buckle, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals, Lieutenant-Colonel Davidson, of the Commissariat, and Captain Thompson, Brigade-Major, had reached that post on the 17th. On the previous day Captain Cookesley, with his guns and mortars and the men of the 22nd and 44th N.I., attached to his battery, had marched in, as well as the head quarters of the 44th Regiment. On the 16th, also, the General and staff left for Station No. 5, about five miles in advance of Tipai Mukh, which station was occupied by a detachment of the 44th N.I., under command of Lieutenant Colonel Nuthall and Captain Lightfoot. The weather continued fine and the nights cold.—Englishman, Dec. 25.

RIGHT COLUMN, RAJAN KLANG KOOKIDOM, 17th Dec.—I wrote to you from Demagiri, which is the base of operations on this side. Since then the gentlemen of the country have vouchsafed to open the ball on the top of the Rajan Klang. The first shot fired was on the 13th December, when Capt. Lewin, the Deputy Commissioner, was fired at, but not hit. On the 14th two reconnoitring parties went out,—the one under Col. Macpherson on the south side, and the other under Major Macintyre, 2nd Goorkhas, on the north. The guide accompanying Col. Macpherson's party showed himself at a very early stage of the proceedings to be ill at ease, and after going some little distance exactly the wrong way, succumbed and confessed himself fairly nonplussed; he did not know the road, and did not want to. He was sent as a guide because he did know the road, and therefore was well qualified to show it to others. The guide being considered by Col. Macpherson a square man in a round hole, and only an encumbrance to the battalion, he was allowed to go home. He went, or as the Yankees would say, "he streaked it for home." Matters were simplified at once, and a pretty direct line taken for the village on the top of the hill. After climbing up a hill very much resembling the side of a house, the party under Col. Macpherson drew up to get wind, and found themselves about 200 yards from a large village, which was thought abandoned. Presently a few armed Kookies turned out, and somebody gave a holloa, and "let slip the dogs of war." The Kookies turned out sharp, knelt down, and delivered an ill-directed volley, and then remembered suddenly that very urgent private affairs required their immediate presence in the jungle below the village. The remarkable keenness displayed in dropping into the jungle showed how very urgent and important the business was. The Goorkhas scurried down into the village as fast as ever short legs could carry them, and finding the Kookies in such a terrible hurry to get away, they pushed them into the jungle with bullets. One dead body was left, and several of the retreating Kookies showed signs of distress, as they disappeared, such as would lead one to suppose that sitting down would be found by many of them a very difficult and delicate operation for some time to come. So this is the beginning of the end. There is one thing very patent to everybody: men with 45lbs. on their backs have little chance of catching Kookies in these jungles; they vanish into the jungle with the same nimbleness evinced by rats in slipping into holes when a cat is after them. A view was obtained a day or two ago into Cachar, but the Cachar Column was not seen. However, it is generally believed that the Cachar Column is a reality. The country we are now in is much more cultivated and open than any we have yet seen, and the population is probably in proportion to the cultivation. If all goes well, the Syloos may be settled by the middle of January, and then the Howlongs country will remain for the end of January and February, by which time I should imagine the Loshais will be inclined to cry "peccavimus;" they will find their crops and grain of the past year burnt, their villages ditto, and the time for preparing the ground for cultivation will have gone by, and the crops for next season will be lost, so they will have a couple of years before them which they may devote to reflection and the study of political and domestic economy, especially domestic. If, too, they can be prevailed upon to make a stand behind a stockade in considerable numbers, their raiding propensities will be subdued for some time no doubt. The prospect for the elephants here is good. No where in India could elephants be fed better or more easily; an unlimited supply of rice, and the jungle contains everything an elephant wants besides. The troops are pretty healthy, and the coolies improving, since they have been prevailed upon to cut down their baggage, and leave the greater part of it at Demagiri. The coolies, for some deluded reason, came from the Punjab to Calcutta, and on as far as Demagiri, bringing with them as much as from 14 to 18 seers of baggage of their own, and when the Government 20 seers was added, their loads became very considerable.—Indian Daily News Correspondent,

STATION TALK.

BENARES, Dec. 12.—Travelling from the southern part of India to any of the stations in the North-West or in Bengal is now much more comfortable and easy than it ever was. It is, indeed, an interesting spectacle to behold the passengers who arrive at the railway station, in Allahabad, by the trains coming from Jabalpur, and whose dress, manners, and language is so different from those among whom they come. From that city they disperse to various quarters of this presidency. Most of them no doubt come to Benares, as religious motives in the majority of cases are the main moving cause of their journeying. There is one remarkable feature of the people of the Bombay Presidency, which no one, making a careful observation and contrast, can fail to notice. They have more originality of and resemblance to, the ancient Hindoos of our old time, than the people of these provinces. Mahomedan conquest and reign seems to have produced very little effect on their dress, habits, and other things. The change which may be found is recent, and the result of their contact with Europeans. The gathering of those who came to bathe in the River Ganges, while the sun was under eclipse, was truly great and enormous. Crowds of pilgrims began to pour in from at least four days before the occurrence. Their number, however, went on increasing as the time approached nearer. By the evening of Monday all the roads were literally obstructed by the bands of Hindoos, composed of men and women, young and old, rich and poor of all castes bound to this holy city. They took up their quarters whatever they found it convenient, and when all the places available for that purpose had been actually thronged, they chose gardens in the suburbs, and even along the road, or under the shade of some tree, for their temporary accommodation. The greater part of these pilgrims consists of persons who are either villagers or illiterate, a fact which alone is a sufficient indication that those who undertake the trouble of such journey in the cold, are people who more or less labour under a mental darkness. The eclipse, as had been foretold by the famous Pandit Babu Deva Sastri of this city, commenced at thirteen minutes after seven, and continued till eight minutes after nine. The arrangement of the police for the safety and convenience of pilgrims, at and in the vicinity of the bank of the river, was highly creditable to the authorities to whom its management was entrusted. They had prepared, especially at Dasaswamedha ghat, two avenues (of poles driven into the ground, with a rope passing through the top of each) for passengers. One of these was exclusively intended for those who were going to, and the other for those who were returning from, the river. I am happy to say that the management being perfectly good, no life was lost, as is usually the case here on such occasions.—Times of India Correspondent.

DELHI, Dec. 19.—General Abbott, Agent for the Punjab and Delhi Railways, was here a few days ago to meet the principal merchants, in order to make enquiries as to the reason why the roads are now to some extent preferred to the rail. The Post-office is not the less in need of enquiry. It is said, that in many places the principal mahajans are compelled, in order to ensure the safety of their hundis and parcels, to pay monthly salaries to Post-office clerks, and so much for each packet safely delivered to the peons! Troops comes in every day now within the last few days. The 14th Hussars, H.M.'s 38th, 65th, 5th, and I think 46th, have come, and a few native Infantry and Cavalry regiments. Also another battery of Artillery.—Times of India Correspondent.

Dec. 21.—On the 18th inst, the 14 N.I. and 3rd Goorkhas arrived. On the 19th, a wing of the 92nd, with head quarters, arrived by rail from Jullundur, and marched off to their camp at Nagul, which is good eight miles from the railway station. On the 20th, the second wing of the 92nd came in and joined its head quarters in the 2nd division. A detachment also of the 109th arrived and went off into the same camp. To enable troops to move at once from the railway stations, elephants, camels, and carts are held in readiness on the spot, and it is wonderful to see how quickly all is loaded and the troops off to their camp. The 2nd Regiment, Central India Horse under Colonel Watson marched into the camp of the 3rd division on the 20th. Col. Watson becomes the senior officer of his brigade. The whole of the troops in the 3rd Division (General Tombs') are realising the fact that this is a camp of exercise, for they parade twice a day for two or three hours, and the horses are already looking as if they felt it. An accident occurred in that division the other morning; only a gun upset, and the wheels went over the gunner's legs happily, without breaking them. The men of the 5th Fusiliers suffered a little at first, probably from the cold and fatigue of the first day; but they are all right now. Two companies of the 72nd Highlanders from Umballa came in to-day, and went off at once to Bussye, in the camp of the 3rd division. The Commander-in-Chief has been absent for a few days on "tour" about the country with the Quarter-master-General. His Excellency is expected back to-morrow. The names of competitors for the assault-of-arms are to be sent in before the 30th, and the men are to be selected on the 2nd January; the assault itself to come off on the 5th and 6th. Lord Mayo is expected here about the 7th. His coming depended on the state of the Prince of Wales; and as the Prince is happily in a fair way towards recovery, nothing will prevent the Viceroy taking a look at Lord Napier's big army. The aspect of the heavens at present indicates rain being very near; the crops will rejoice; not so regiments who are encamped in ploughed fields, as many—indeed most of them—are. The real worry of the Camp will begin about the 8th, when bell tents will be served out to the troops, and the marching about begins.

Dec. 24.—To-day by the arrival of the 3rd Regiment N.I. from Meerut, and of the Rurki detachment of the 109th Regiment, both by rail, the force is complete. The 105th Regiment from Meerut, and the head quarters and seven companies of the 72nd Regiment from Umballa arrived yesterday, and a very pleasant march they must have had of it in a perfect hurricane of wind and rain, which began on the night of the 21st and went on with slight intermission till yesterday near midnight. The 20th Hussars from Umballa and E-F R.H.A. and E-19th R.A. from the Punjab marched into the camp of the second division on the 21st. As before observed, the troops composing the Camp of Exercise have now all arrived. The force consists of six batteries of Royal Artillery, three regiments of British cavalry, six regiments of British infantry, eight companies of sappers and miners, seven regiments of native cavalry, and twelve regiments of native infantry; and may thus be summarized:—Europeans, seven thousand; natives, eleven thousand; horses, five thousand; guns, fifty-four. The estimate of men and horses is, if anything under the mark. The force is divided into three divisions, which are again sub-divided into nine brigades; each division and brigade is commanded by a Major-General and a brigadier with full staff. The natives, cannot be dissuaded from the notion that something real is meant by all this gathering of troops, the more especially when they see that large stores of grain and fodder have been collected at various places. Is it likely, they argue, that the Sirkar would make all these preparations unless they meant something by it? Who ever heard of so many troops being assembled from various quarters merely for a show or a series of parades? We are to have two distinguished visitors on the 8th of next month—the Viceroy and the King of Siam. Tents in great numbers are to be seen arriving at the E.I.R. station for the Viceroyal camp; and considering the visit is only to last some two or three days, it does seem a piece of extravagance.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Dec. 25.—We are resting on our oars, and doing it very well. To-morrow we buckle-to again—some brigades in the morning, and some in the afternoon, in order that the men's hats may not feel too tight for their heads, and that they may have had time to get over the other effects of having made it Christmas. The country is still very heavy and sticky, so that the two days' rest of Sunday and Christmas-day together comes rather opportunely, as we should have been almost forced to have knocked off work, which would have been a pity now that we have all got together for the express purpose of learning more about soldiering than can be picked up in well-kept cantonments, metalled roads, and smooth parade grounds. "I want none of your lawn parties," was the remark of one of our generals, who is quite of the right sort, to a young gentleman who adduced, "rough ground" as an excuse for something that was not done as well as it might have been. When the Viceroy comes we are to have one or two great field days. The second and third divisions will march northwards in the direction of Badlee ke Serai, close to which there is a fine plain. This will be pleasant enough for the first division, the ground being within a couple of miles of its camp, but it will be a day's outing for Generals McMurdo and Tombs' forces. They have had very bad times of it during this rainy weather, their camps being pitched in ploughed fields. It is about a ride of twenty miles round the three positions. The site of the first is greatly envied by the others. Pitched as it is just beyond the Delhi Ridge, the ground is, as a rule, undulating and grassy. The Head Quarter Camp is close by, and there are good roads to get into Delhi or else where; but the others are away in the wilds. The Third Division has a kutchra road of sorts leading to it, but number 2, with the exception of the railway embankment, is almost unget-at-able on wheels. The force for the Viceroy's inspection will, it is expected, be formed up in a sort of contiguous column of divisions; or rather, to make it clear to the uninitiated, each division formed in three lines—first line infantry, second line artillery, third line cavalry, and standing side by side. This will be very pretty to look at, and after her Majesty's representative has admired our soldierlike appearance we shall probably form in battle array. About the 12th or 13th proximo we shall go out on the war trial and stay out about a fortnight.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

CIVIL.—Mr. D. Simson has been allowed to resign the Civil Service from the 21st instant. Mr. Simson arrived in this country in April 1846, and was, before he went on furlough, one of the Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

A STRIKING LESSON.—The Ameer of Cabul the other day gave General Daoud Shah a sound thrashing in Durbar for speculation. The Punjab paper wishes that some of our Government departments would follow the Ameer's good example in this respect.

PRESENTS FROM SHERE ALI.—The presents from the Ameer of Kabul to the British Governor have reached Peshawur. They are immense in quantity, says the Punjab Times, and will take the bullock train a fortnight to despatch, using all their available carts.

THE SEISTAN MISSION.—Colonel Pollock left Lahore on Wednesday, Dec. 27, for Shikarpoor, where his camp is collecting for his Seistan march. He is accompanied by Dr. Bellew. The march to Seistan will occupy about two months, and the journey from Seistan to Teheran as much.

THE FIFTY-FIVE YEARS' RULE.—The Government of India, in the Home Department, is said to have ruled that local governments should exercise the power of sanctioning retention of office by Unconvenanted Officers after they attain the age of sixty years, in cases where they think such necessary.

EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.—Mr. J. G. Cordery, C.S., has been appointed to succeed Captain Holroyd as Director of Public Instruction, Punjab. Mr. Cordery is known to the literary world as the latest translator of Homer. Speaking of his qualifications for the office the Punjab Times says:—"If the Punjab Government were disposed to find a director outside the Educational Department they could not have selected an officer of greater accomplishments and higher literary reputation than Mr. Cordery."

A THEISTIC ANNUAL.—We understand that a Theistic annual is to be published on the occasion of the coming anniversary of the Brahmo Somaj. The annual will comprise theological essays in English and Bengali; devotional pieces in both the languages, prayers, hymns, and reflections; short historical sketches and anecdotes, with wholesome moral and religious tendencies. The contributions will come from different hands, and will bear the initials of the writers, all of whom have been long connected with the Brahmo Somaj. The editorship is undertaken by a gentleman who is well known to the Brahmo public, and who has the honour of enjoying their confidence.—Indian Mirror.

ACCIDENT AT MEEAN MEER.—We regret to hear of a rather serious accident at Meean Meer, by which two ladies, the Misses Hewson, have been severely injured. They were driving with another lady in a dog cart, when the horse shied, and being too sharply pulled up, ran the cart against the coping of a small bridge, throwing the ladies violently off. Miss Hewson had a double fracture of her left collar bone, and her sister had her right collar bone broken. Mrs. Gilbert, though much shaken, escaped with a few bruises.—Indian Public Opinion, Dec. 19.

A NEW WAY OF PRESERVING WOOD.—A new process has been discovered for the prevention of decay in wood, which it may be desirable to lay before our readers. As the result of a five years' experience, a paint is recommended, which at the same time possesses the advantage of being impervious to water. It is composed of 50 parts of tar, 500 parts of fine white sand, 4 parts of linseed oil, one part of the red oxide of copper in its native state, and finally, one part of sulphuric acid. In order to manufacture the paint from these materials, the tar, chalk, sand, and oil, are first heated in an iron kettle; the oxide and acid are then added with caution. The mass is very carefully mixed, and applied while hot. When thoroughly dry, the paint is as hard as stone.—Indian Economist.

PROSPECTS OF THE CROPS.—The rice crops have been harvested generally throughout India, with the exception of Coorg. All through Central India, Oudh, and the Punjab anxiety is felt regarding the rubber crops, which have suffered in part for want of the usual winter showers. The weather in all these provinces is reported to be cloudy and unsettled. In British Burmah, Madras, and Bengal the crops are reported to be fair and promising, though in a portion of the Cuttack country between the Chilka Lake and the sea there has been extensive failure and some apprehension of distress exists. The cotton prospects continue to be discouraging in Khandeish, Nussick, and the Deccan, and to some extent in the Southern Malabar country. The accounts from other parts of Bombay are on the whole favourable. Cattle disease has appeared in the neighbourhood of Mundla and Jubbulpore, and in a limited area in the Punjab.—Gazette of India, Dec. 23.

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE PERSO-BELOOCH FRONTIER.—The following letter from Mr. C. U. Aitchison, C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to Major-General Sir F. Goldsmid, C.B., K.C.S.I., dated 19th December, 1871, appears in the Gazette of India:—"With reference to the correspondence on the subject of the Perso-Belooch Frontier, I am directed to convey to you the warm acknowledgments of the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council for the patience, firmness and ability which have characterised your proceedings in the discharge of the difficult duty entrusted to you. His Excellency the Governor-General in Council considers that it is mainly to your tact and sound judgment that the satisfactory settlement of this important boundary is due. His Excellency in Council desires that you will convey to Captain Evan Smith and Captain B. Lovett, R.E., both of your staff, the thanks of the Government of India for the valuable assistance rendered to you. His Excellency in Council further desires that you will express to Quartermaster Sergeant Bower, R.E., and Mirza Hussun, your Moonshee, the high opinion entertained by the Government of India of the value of their services."

ASSAM.—It is rumoured, says a correspondent, that Colonel E. T. Dalton, C.S.I., will probably be placed at the head of the administration in Assam. Colonel Dalton was many years in the province, and he is said to be well acquainted with the language, manners, and customs of the various tribes. His services in the cause of literature and science, as an active member of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and as author of the "Ethnology of the Hill Tribes of Chota Nagpore," are well known, and the bestowal of the Star of India is sufficient evidence that they have not been unappreciated by the State. The appointment of the gallant Colonel to the Chief Commissionership will not, we trust, cause irritation and heart-burning among civil military officers, as did that of the Hon. Ashley Eden to British Burmah. Colonel Agnew, Judicial Commissioner of Assam, who went home on two years' furlough, is expected to return to India without availing himself of the full period of his leave. His return will possibly increase the number of competitors already in the field for the Assam prize appointment.—Bengal Times, Dec. 23.

SIR ROBERT STEUART.—With reference to the Englishman's suggestions of "jobbery" in the nomination to the Chief Justiceship of these Provinces, we are in a position to state with confidence that Sir Robert Steuart never applied by himself, or through his friends, for the appointment; that he has not, and never had, any personal acquaintance with the Duke of Argyll, or with the authorities of the India Office; that on the contrary he is, and has been all his life, a Conservative, and in politics opposed to the present Government, a fact which was known to the Duke of Argyll when he made the appointment; that he was recommended for his high office by leading members of his profession on the Bench and at the Bar in England; and that in short the appointment was made entirely on professional and public grounds. Our readers and contemporaries, including the Englishman, may rely on the absolute accuracy of these statements, which, indeed, even understate the case in favour of the Chief Justice. Suffice it to say that he was not only a Queen's Counsel, but he was, and still is, a Bencher of his Inn,—Lincoln's Inn, certainly anything but an ignoble position for a barrister to hold.—Pioneer, Dec. 25.

AN EXPENSIVE MISSIONARY.—An instance of how expensive any missionary of a society can be is exemplified in the case of the Rev. A. Symonds, Secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at Madras. This gentleman is stated by a contemporary to have not only enjoyed a plurality of incomes, but to have been almost useless in his vocation. He was a director of a life insurance company, principal of seminary for training native clergymen, chaplain to his Excellency the Governor of Madras, secretary to his own society, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and of course, with all these, a missionary. A contemporary thinks that Mr. Symonds is about to retire now, with, what is estimated, a large fortune. Our contemporary thinks that no missionary could have made it out of his slender pay and allowances, and that therefore the rev. gentleman must have been working more for filling his own pockets than for serving the ends of the society for which he was engaged. This may be a harsh estimate, but just before retiring, Mr. Symonds has been doing the grand tour of the Madras Presidency, accompanying Lord Napier's peregrinations, and the question is pertinently put, at whose expense was this sight-seeing performed? It is possible that we shall find as expensive employes of missionary societies, especially of our Church Societies, even in Bengal. We never did see the necessity of a secretary to any of our missionary societies out here, especially if he does no missionary work, and certainly if secretaries are so expensive as to require nearly double the pay of a poor, hardworking missionary, the sooner they are done away with the better.—Delhi Gazette.

AMEER KHAN'S APPEAL.—THE SENTENCE CONFIRMED.—Judgment was delivered this morning in Ameer Khan's appeal by the learned Chief Justice. After stating the charges on which Ameer Khan was tried, he referred to the objections taken by Mr. Anstey, and as regarded the third objection, he said that this point ought not to prevail, being already decided by various decisions of the High Court here, as well as at Bombay. As to the first of these objections, he was of opinion that the Code of Criminal Procedure gave jurisdiction to try the abetment of an offence to the Court within whose jurisdiction the offence abetted was committed; and as to the third objection, that Ameer Khan had already been convicted and punished under Regulation III. of 1818, he was of opinion that he could not agree with the ruling of Mr. Justice Phear, that that regulation constituted the Governor-General in Council a judicial tribunal. Such was not consistent with the tenor of the preamble and other parts of the regulation, and that therefore there had in no sense been a prior conviction for the same offences. The learned judge then went into the evidence adduced by the prosecution, and thought that the two charges had been made out against Ameer Khan, and that, therefore, the sentence of the lower Court ought to be confirmed. With regard to Tobarack Ali, one of the prisoners tried at the same time as Ameer Khan, the learned judge thought the case had been proved against him, and the sentence was confirmed as regards this prisoner also. The sentence of the lower Court with regard to Mobarack Ali, Haji Din Muhammad and Aminuddin, against whom the charges had not been proved, would be reversed. Mr. Justice L. S. Jackson and Mr. Justice Macpherson both concurred in the judgment of the Chief Justice.—Englishman, Dec. 22.

THE RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.—The railway accounts for the first three quarters 1871, just published by the Government of India, show a sensible falling off in the total receipts as compared with those of the same period of the previous year. It is gratifying to find, however, that the falling-off is by no means so serious as might have been expected from the alarming statements that have been made on the subject, or as it would have been had the failure in the traffic on the East Indian line not been to some extent compensated by gains elsewhere. The actual figures for the nine months are £4,339,479, as against £4,571,389 in the corresponding nine months of 1870, the falling off being consequently £231,910, whereas on the East-Indian line alone the falling off is £320,543. It is further noticeable that the third quarter of the year showed a tendency in the traffic to revive, the falling off in that quarter being only about £36,000. The fourth quarter of the year will probably show at least as good a result as the fourth quarter of last year. We notice that, notwithstanding the serious interruption to its traffic from floods, the earnings of the Eastern Bengal line for the nine months are better than last year by nearly £36,000. The average receipts per mile are, however, only 26·4, against 28·3. But even this seems, under the circumstances, a favourable result. The receipts of the Calcutta and South-Eastern show a considerable improvement for the entire nine months, though a slight falling off in the third quarter alone, while a very marked increase is shown in the earnings of the G. I. P. Railway, which occurred chiefly in the third quarter.—Englishman.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 27.—The market has not altered, business having remained exceedingly quiet, and prices being without change.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Dec. 27.—Jute is firm, but no actual rise has taken place. Saltpetre is dull, but holders stand out for full prices. Rice is only in demand for the colonies. Linseed has been purchased to some extent for America at previous quotations. In Silk, some middling Jungypore has been sold at Rs. 12-5. The November bund may soon be expected in the market.

THE CATTLE IN NADDEA.—A correspondent of a native paper says that in the district of Bhagairhat, in Nadda, three-fourths of the cattle have died from want of forage, all the grass having been destroyed by the floods.—Englishman, Dec. 23.

EARTHQUAKE AT PROME.—We learn from Prome that at 26 minutes past 10 on the night of the 12th December an earthquake, which lasted about ten seconds, was felt at Prome. The wave appeared to travel from north-east to south-west. The shocks were stated to be severe, and followed in quick succession, but no damage is reported in the town. The earthquake occurred on the night of the new moon. A letter received from Henzadah states that an earthquake was felt there about 11.30 on the night of the 12th December.—Rangoon Mail, Dec. 20.

AN ODD SUIT.—A most singular suit was lately filed in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Ranaghat, Bengal. An old Brahmin had a daughter for whom many suitors contended. The father, however, kept raising her dowry higher and higher, in the hope of getting as much as possible for her, until the girl, tired of waiting for an husband, eloped for nothing with a lover of her own choice. The father sued the young husband on the ground that he had caused him great pecuniary loss. The judge, however, was with the young people.—Pioneer, Dec. 25.

SUICIDE OF A SOLDIER.—A soldier of the 21st Fusiliers committed suicide at Bangalore on Tuesday last, by shooting himself. The man ate a hearty breakfast, and seemed in good spirits. After finishing his meal he went to his room, took his rifle, and shot himself. When it was discovered he was lying on his bed, and he seems to have destroyed himself by placing the rifle to his head, and pulling the trigger with his right toe. Death must have been instantaneous, as the skull was blown completely off, and the brains were scattered about the room. The man had served fourteen years in the regiment, and had always borne a good character, and no motive has been discovered for the act.—Madras Times, Dec. 28.

FAMINE RELIEF WORKS.—Colonel Fischer, Acting Superintending Engineer, 1st division, sent a letter to Government a short time ago, stating that as the north-east monsoon had failed in all the districts of his division, he thought it necessary to undertake relief works in many places. He recommended that in Ganjam the trunk road through the district should be completed. In the Vizagapatam district, the Colonel thought the trunk road should be completed from Tuni to Chicacole. It is also recommended that the Chilka Lake Canal should be extended to Gopalpore. The Government has ordered Colonel Fischer to make arrangements with the collectors of the districts to carry out the necessary works. Mr. Thornhill, acting second member of the Board of Revenue, is to go to the northern district to ascertain how matters stand with respect to the harvest prospects. Mr. Thornhill has been requested to go up in the steamer that leaves to-day.

THE LATE ECLIPSE.—M. Jansen, the celebrated French Astronomer, has, we learn from our contemporary the South of India Observer, been most successful. We are told that after a minute and careful inspection of the country, extending over eight days, and an investigation of the drift and current of the clouds, M. Jansen fixed upon the hill above the Dunsandle tea plantation, at Sholoor, as his station for observing. The Commissioner had a small hut erected for him on the spot he had chosen, and Captain Sargeant, of the Revenue Survey Department, was deputed to attend to M. Jansen. The proprietor of the estate near which M. Jansen had established his post of observation has all along been most courteous to the French Astronomer. Our contemporary adds, that there is a rumour that M. Jansen has determined from his observation that theory regarding the existence of matter, beyond the sun's atmosphere, is undoubtedly a fact.

TRAVANCORE CUSTOMS.—Should a cat (especially if it be a tom cat) cross the threshold of a house, and the youngest child in the house (boy or girl—it does not matter) sneeze at that instant—the eldest daughter must wish for a husband. If she refuse to wish by sundown, she must procure, at her own expense, a coconut—half of this she must give to the priests, and the other half to a newly married woman. The milk she may do what she likes with—the laws of the country not requiring her to account for this phenomenon. The origin of this custom is uncertain, as is that of the following:—Should a Namburi and a man of the low Pulyan caste, in turning a corner, happen to rub shoulders, and a dog bark at the instant, the Pulyan must stand upon his head for the rest of the day; should he, from age, infirmity, or disinclination, refuse to do this, he must walk backwards to the nearest Sudra's shop and there purchase a measure of rice; this he may do what he likes with—he generally boils and eats it. The Namburi must climb up a cocoanut tree and there remain for the rest of the day to avoid further contamination. He is considered to be in luck if a heavy shower of rain comes on as this effectually cleanses him. The two following explain themselves:—Should a man fall ill, between the new and old moons, and he have no aunt, brother, or nephew, then his mother's brother's sister's son (if he be alive) must take a dose of physic. If a man fall ill at any other time he must take physic himself. Again, should a Numburi call upon a Numburi lady while her husband is out, he must leave his shoes at the threshold: should the husband return before the visitor has left, and disapprove of the visit, he substitutes his own shoes for those at the threshold and walks off. This is a sell for the visitor, as it is considered a point of honour for him to step into the husband's shoes. As a rule, Namburis are very careful to ascertain that the husbands of their lady friends are at home before they call upon them.—Madras Athenæum, Dec. 14.

DEATH OF MR. J. STEWART.—We regret to hear of the death of Mr. John Stewart, the able Telegraph Superintendent of the G.I.P. Railway Company, who died at Callian of typhoid fever, at the premature age of thirty years. Mr. Stewart was much esteemed by all who knew him.

ASSEERGHUR BARRACKS.—We have been informed that the local Sanitary Commissioner at Bombay has recommended to the Sanitary Commissioner to the Government of India that a new site should be selected at Asseerghur for the construction of a barrack for European soldiers, and that the old one, which has of late proved injurious to the health of the troops since the outbreak of cholera there, should be destroyed. The new building is to be a two-storied one, and to be constructed with every regard to sanitation, and sufficiently commodious to afford accommodation to 5,000 soldiers at a time. The cook-rooms and the latrines, unlike those of the old barrack, are to be quite independent of the main building. The above mentioned proposition is said to have been approved of by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the Government of India.—Indian Daily News.

DEATH BY DROWNING.—A very melancholy occurrence took place on Tuesday evening at the village of Penn, on the mainland, resulting in the death by drowning of Mr. Walter Williamson, a promising young man who had just completed his twenty-first year, eldest son of Mr. George Williamson, of the Custom's Preventive Service, Mazagon. Young Mr. Williamson, along with a few companions, went across the harbour on a shooting excursion, to spend their Christmas holidays, and on the evening of Tuesday he went into a tank at the village of Penn to bathe. Whilst swimming about he was seized with cramp, and sunk before assistance could be rendered. Two of his comrades at once started for Bombay, and on their arrival yesterday morning brought the sad intelligence to his disconsolate parents. The father at once set off for the scene of the occurrence, and every effort was made to recover the body—with what success we have not heard. This melancholy event has cast quite a gloom over Mazagon, where the deceased youth was well known, and of which place his father is one of the oldest and most respected inhabitants.—Times of India, Dec. 30.

THE LATE CAPTAIN WOOD, I.N.—At a special meeting of the principal officers of the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, on the 11th inst., the following graceful tribute was recorded regarding the death of Captain John Wood, the Sind agent of the company:—"The agent wishes to record, with feelings of deepest regret, the death, in London, on the 13th November, of Captain John Wood, agent in Sind, of this company. The agent, in recording this event, feels it a melancholy but pleasing duty to place on record the highest possible tribute to the memory of this lamented officer, whose devotion to the service of the company for a period of ten years has been most manifest. Captain Wood's early career in the Indian Navy was, the agent believes, marked by the same devotion to the service, and that the world at large has benefited greatly by the accurate surveys executed by him on the Indian Coast and in the Red Sea, and by his enterprising explorations in Asia up to the sources of the river Oxus. The agent laments the loss of a coadjutor, whose stern discipline, tempered with kindness and consideration, raised the Company's Indus Steam Flotilla to a high standard of excellence, and who conducted the affairs of the Sind Railway with admirable discretion. In the demise of this officer the company has sustained a loss which will be long felt and lamented. Resolved that the meeting, concurring in the sentiments contained in the agent's memorandum, direct that the same be recorded."—Indian Public Opinion, Dec. 22.

BEYOND THE SCINDE FRONTIER.—Native advices state that when the Shah Gazee was deputed by the Khan to assume the reins of power in Lus Beyla, on the depositions of the ex-Jam, he took four wives with him to that place. On his instalment in office he contracted a union with a girl of the Gorguch tribe. When dissensions arose between Ali Khan Jamote and the Shah Gazee, and the former meditated an attack on Beyla, the Shah Gazee resolved on slaying his wives, so as to prevent their falling into the hands of Ali Khan Jamote, in the event of a reverse; the Shah Gazee was about putting his intentions into effect, and was on the point of entering his seraglio for the purpose, when he was met by his Dewan, Mungneeram, whom he informed of the desperate resolve he had made, and his reasons for making it. The Shah Gazee said that he was going to give battle to Ali Khan Jamote, and that the issue of the contest was doubtful; that should a reverse befall his arms, his wives would be at the mercy of the Noomrias, the tribe in hostility with him; the Shah Gazee measured others by his own bushel, for he adduced instances of the cruelties practised by him and his men on the Noomria women when they fell into his hands. The Dewan thereupon strongly advised the Shah Gazee to desist from carrying out the desperate resolve he had made, and informed him that on going on an expedition against an enemy he should hope for the best, and not to think of death, but of victory, and that he should go with a cheerful and stout heart. The Shah Gazee listened to the advice of his Dewan, locked the door of the gate of the compound in which the seraglio was situated, and proceeded on his expedition, with a force consisting of about 250 men of all arms, accompanied by the Dewan. The expedition proved a successful one, and the Shah Gazee had the satisfaction to return consoled with the reflection that he had spared the lives of his wives.—On Thursday last the natives in the town of Kurrachee were in a state of excitement on hearing that the ex-Jam of Lus Beyla was a passenger in the steamer which arrived from Bombay on that day. Those who had business connections with Beyla and Soonmeanee, and such as were natives of those places, flocked in large numbers to the bund to receive the Jam with all due clat. They, however, were wofully disappointed, and had to return wiser, though sadder men. The rumour about the Jam's return originated from a paragraph which appeared in the Bombay Gazette, stating that the Jam had been sent from Bombay to Ahmednuggur; the name of the latter place was translated "ap ka nuggur," meaning the Jam's own "nuggur," or country.—Sindian, Dec. 23.

RULES REGARDING THE APPOINTMENT, PROMOTION, AND POSTING OF POLICE OFFICERS BELOW THE GRADE OF ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENTS.

Nov. 13.—The following rules, most of which correspond to those which have been found to work well in Oude, are promulgated for the guidance of magistrates and police officers. They supersede the rules regarding promotion of police officers contained in police circular No. 4 of 1870, paragraph 7:—

1. The district superintendent will make all appointments and promotions up to and including the grade of head constable; but the magistrate of the district may place a veto on any appointment or promotion.

2. Nominations to the grade of sub-inspector will be made by the district superintendent, but such nominations will require the formal sanction of the magistrate of the district before the actual appointment is made.

3. When there is a vacancy in the grade of inspector, a nomination will be sent by the district superintendent to the magistrate of the district, who will record his approval or disapproval; and, if he disapproves, will make another nomination of a police officer for the promotion. The magistrate will then submit the nomination or nominations to the Commissioner, who will forward them, with his opinion, to the Inspector general. The Inspector general will ordinarily appoint, or submit for appointment by Government in the usual manner, any person nominated as above and approved by the Commissioner, unless he sees special objection, in which case he will record his objections and submit the case for the orders of Government.

4. District superintendents may suspend, reduce, or dismiss, any officer under the grade of head constable, subject to the veto of the magistrate of the district, and also subject to the present rules regarding appeals.

5. Officers of higher grade may be suspended under the same conditions as above; but if they are reduced or dismissed, the sentence shall not be carried out without the approval of the magistrate of the district in the case of a head constable, and of both the magistrate of the district and the Inspector general in the case of officers of higher grades. After approval as above, there will be no appeal; but in case either the Inspector general or Commissioner consider that a special injustice has been done, they may represent the case for the orders of Government.

6. Magistrates of all grades shall be at liberty to record their opinion that any police officer has deserved reward or punishment for his conduct in any case or cases tried by them, and magistrates other than the magistrate of the district shall submit such recommendations to the magistrate of the district. The magistrate of the district may also record an opinion as above in regard to the conduct of any police officer in any other duty coming under his notice or reported to him.

The magistrate of the district may direct the entry of such recommendation in the character-book kept by the superintendent of police. A similar order may be passed by the Commissioner of the division.

7. In case punishment is recommended, the superintendent of police will either punish or submit to the magistrate of the district or Commissioner (when the Commissioner has recommended punishment) his reasons for not doing so. If the magistrate of the district or Commissioner deem the reasons unsatisfactory, the district superintendent shall carry out such punishment as the magistrate or Commissioner may direct. An appeal from the order of the magistrate shall lie to the Commissioner of the division only. District superintendents retain the power of inflicting minor punishment on their own motion, subject to the present rules regarding appeals in such cases.

8. In making promotions or recommendations for promotion, the district superintendent shall have full and due regard to the recommendations entered in the character-book as above directed. If men well recommended are passed over in favour of others of whom the magistrate does not approve, the magistrate may require the district superintendent to submit the name of a person so recommended. The district superintendent may request that the order may be submitted for the sanction of the Commissioner, who will finally decide.

9. Police officers will ordinarily be considered to be attached to the districts and divisions in which they are now serving, and will be locally promoted.

10. Except temporarily on emergency, or for detective or other inquiries, no police officer will be removed from any district to another in the same division without the consent of the magistrate of the district in which he is serving, or the order of the Commissioner of the division in which he is serving or the order of the Commissioner of the division in which he is serving or the order of Government.

11. The magistrate will have a veto on transfers of police officers from one place to another within the district, and should take care that local efficiency is not sacrificed by frequent transfers.

12. The Inspector general is requested to submit a scheme showing the number of inspectors of each grade to be attached to each division, and the number of sub-inspectors of each grade to each district. He is also requested to revise the present rules regarding qualifications for police offices, appeals from orders in the Police Department and other cognate subjects, to incorporate with them the rules now published, and to submit the whole for the consideration of Government.

Offic. junior Sec. to the Govt. of Bengal.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Simla, Oct. 25.—Read a letter:—

From the Comptroller general, No. 789, dated Oct. 4, inquiring whether certain items of revenue and charge which, from their inclusion in accounts current between departments could not be adjusted in the year to which they appertained, should be adjusted in the following year as revenue and charge of the later year, or be adjusted outside the finance and revenue accounts through the head of "Government."

Resolution.—The Comptroller general very properly does not advise an adjustment outside the finance and revenue accounts through the head of "Government;" but the existence of any doubt on the subject after so many years' experience of the budget system; and some recent instances of the retention of final payments under suspense of other debt heads, pending removal of technical objections to the payments, render it desirable to restate the rules which should be implicitly observed for the future.

2. The head "Government" should be strictly confined to its use as a closing head; it should not be employed to relieve other heads of account though writes-off from those heads; and adjustment of items of revenue and charge, which date since the introduction of the new system of accounts in 1865-66, should on no account be made to "Government," or be kept out of the revenue and finance accounts.

3. Actual revenue or charge which, for any reason, may not have been recorded as such in the accounts of the year to which it relates, should be so recorded in the earliest accounts that are open, and the record should be scrupulously made the moment that a final adjustment is practicable.

4. Final adjustments have often been retarded by erroneous or defective procedure, and, in correction of such, the following rules should be observed:—

I.—Money indisputably payable under rule, contract, operation of law, or other obligation, should be paid even in the absence of budget provision, and should be adjusted against the proper grant of the year, even when sanction to an additional grant may be deferred from any cause. Financial Order No. 5,024, dated November 13, 1869. Financial Notification No. 1,274 dated Feb. 22, 1870.

II.—A final payment of charge by a treasury or a disbursing officer should be recorded against the grant, even when the officer who made the disbursement, or the authority that ordered it, is held responsible for the amount owing to defect of vouchers, or of budget provision, or of competent sanction, or to other cause; the amount, while charged against the proper grant, being held in an objection statement against the officer who is responsible.

III.—The adjustment of a charge against the proper grant under the two preceding rules is not to annul or impair the responsibility of any officer who may be accountable for securing competent sanction or obtaining proper budget provision for the expenditure, nor do the rules now prescribed dispense with the obligation to obtain budget provision before payment for any charge which, in the absence of budget provision, the authority who may order its disbursement is incompetent to sanction.

IV.—Owing to non-receipt in sufficient time (by the department or presidency which has to make the final adjustment) of the accounts current for the last month of the year between Governments or departments, and between presidency and presidency, items of charge or receipt remain over for adjustment in the following year. But the number of such postponed items should be reduced as much as possible by the transmission of vouchers of receipts and final payments in anticipation of the complete account current for the last month of the year.

5. Errors of classification of revenue or charge in the monthly accounts may, during the progress of the year, be corrected by transfer debits and credits in the accounts of succeeding months, but no such correction of errors in the accounts of one year should be attempted in those of a following year. When once the account for a year has been closed, errors in it, if affecting revenue or charge heads exclusively, are past amendment, and they should be simply noted in the appropriation audit report. The accounts of a province or department for any year are not, however, to be considered as finally closed until the closure of the accounts at the central office of the Comptroller general.

6. If a receipt or charge appertaining to general revenue has been wrongly adjusted in any year under a debt head, the error may be corrected in any later year by debit to allowances and refunds if general revenue has to pay to a debt account; or by credit to the appropriate head of receipts if it has to receive from a debt account.

Order.—Ordered, that a copy of this Resolution be sent to the Military and Public Works Departments, the several Local Governments, the Comptroller general, and the several Accountants general and Deputy Accountants general in independent charge. RIVERS THOMPSON.

BRITISH MEDICAL SERVICE.

Under instructions from her Majesty's Government, it is hereby notified that an officer of the British Medical Service in India, who may be holding an administrative office tenable for five years, if compelled by ill health to return to England, can only receive from the Indian Government under which he is serving permission to return home for the purpose of appearing before a medical board in London.

2. The leave which will be there granted to him on the recommendation of such medical board will not exceed six months from the date of his departure from India, and if, on arrival in England, the state of his health is such as to render it unlikely that he will be fit to return to his duties within the abovementioned period, he will be replaced on the Indian establishment by an efficient officer.

OFFICERS—ARRIVALS—LEAVE.

In supersession of the orders marginally noted,* and with view to stop the practice which now prevails of officers soliciting, contrary to regulation,† the cancelment in G.O. of unexpired periods of leave, the following rules are published for guidance:—

1. In the case of officers returning from Europe or the colonies, the G.G.O. announcing their arrival in India virtually cancels all unexpired portions of furlough. No separate reports to the Adjutant general required.

2. Officers rejoining from local leave before due date, or from furlough in India (whether such furlough has expired or not), will report, as heretofore, the date of return to duty; and transmitting authorities will certify to the accuracy of such reports.

3. Officers who, whilst on leave, may be ordered on court-martial, court of inquiry, committee of adjustment, board of examination, or other duty, will report the period of such employment, vouched by copies of orders conveying and dissolving the court, committee or board, or by certificate from the President of the same; in either case to be in duplicate.

4. The foregoing paras. apply also to officers of the British (formerly of the Indian) Army under Indian pension rules. The reports referred to will be forwarded to the adjutant-general, for transmission to the Military Department, Calcutta, where service for pension is recorded.

5. In regard to British officers, the monthly returns and pay abstracts of regiments will show dates of return from leave, and will be sufficient authority for the pay department; and when a British officer on leave is employed as mentioned in para. 3, a copy of orders or certificate as therein indicated should accompany the regimental pay abstracts. No reports to adjutant general being required.

LEAVE—ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The following letter from the officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to the Controller of Military Accounts, is published for general information:—

"In reply to your letter, No. 349H, dated the 17th June last, I am directed to acquaint you that the Right Hon. the Secretary of State has decided that officers of the Royal Engineers who hold permanent staff appointments not of a regimental nature and who may desire to take leave to England under circumstances which by the furlough rules of 1868 involve forfeiture of appointment, cannot obtain furlough under those rules. They must therefore obtain the leave, if at all, just as any other officer of her Majesty's British troops holding no staff appointment.

"2. But the principle laid down in G.G.O. No. 22, dated January 6, 1870 (without the addendum notified in G.G.O. No. 54 of 1871), and in para. 2 of G.G.O. No. 627, dated June 17, 1870, is applicable to such officers, the three years' service required being reckoned, in the case of those who are completing their first tour of service in India, from the date of their reporting their arrival in this country."

OFFICERS—ARRIVALS—LEAVE—RETURNS.

In supersession of the orders marginally noted, the C. in C. directs that, in the case of a captain and subaltern of the Bengal army who may vacate his regimental appointment by proceeding on ordinary furlough, leave, or leave on medical certificate, or by overstaying his leave, he will continue to be returned on the rolls of his corps as an attached officer; and will, without the issue of any further orders, rejoin it on return from such furlough or leave, unless he is meanwhile promoted to substantive field rank, or his services be otherwise employed.

2. This ruling applies also to officers doing duty with native regiments, and to officers permitted to study at the Roorkee College; it being the wish of the C. in C. that officers shall invariably return to their old regiments, unless specially ordered to the contrary.

3. Officers of the Bengal Presidency returning from England via Bombay, en route to this command, are to report themselves, on arrival at Allahabad or Mooltan, to the officers commanding at those stations; who will, as a temporary arrangement, appoint those of substantive field rank, only, to do duty at the station, submitting a report of the same for the further orders of the C. in C.

4. The brigade major at Bombay is requested to point out this order to all officers arriving for the Bengal Presidency.

5. Officers who arrive at Calcutta from England will report themselves as heretofore to the general officer commanding the presidency district, who will act, with respect to field officers, as directed in paragraph 3.

6. The above order does not affect officers of her Majesty's British service, or those returning to appointments on the staff; nor is it to interfere in any way with the provisions of G.O. 265 of 1868.

MUNICIPAL.—Mr. G. J. B. T. Dalton to be vice-chairman of the Municipal Commissioners for the town of Bhaugulpore. Surg. C. J. Jackson to officiate as sanitary commissioner of Bengal.

RATES OF PENSION.—In order to prevent any doubt on the point, it is notified for general information that the provisions of the 3rd clause of para. 61 of the despatch of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, published in G.G.O. No. 808 of Sept. 26, 1866, which extended the military regulations by the addition of two rates of pension, viz., £600 after 35 years' and £750 after 38 years' service, are applicable to all officers now in, or who may hereafter enter, the Indian Staff Corps.

ADVANCES TO EUROPEAN DETACHMENTS.—In cancelment of previous orders (para. 7 of clause 114 of Army Circular of Aug. 1, 1870, published in G.G.O. No. 1,163 of Dec. 15, 1870), H.E. the Governor general in Council is pleased to notify that, under instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, advances will no longer be issued to detachments of European troops returning to England; but that on their arrival in that country they will be settled with for the period of their voyage by the War Office; the disbursements on account being charged to the Indian revenues. In order to ensure the prompt settlement of claims against the men at the port of disembarkation on account of any loss or damage of ship-stores, &c., the officer in command of the detachment, if not in possession of sufficient public money, will be provided with the necessary funds by an accountant on the spot; the recoveries from the men of the sums paid on their behalf being made by the War Office. Official Papers.

PUBLIC WORKS GRANT FOR 1872-73.

The Governor-general in Council having had under consideration the question of the amount that can be allotted from ordinary revenues for expenditure on Imperial public works during 1872-73, has decided that the grant for this purpose shall be fixed at two millions sterling, being £388,000 less than the grant of 1871-72. The financial prospects for next year renders this reduction necessary. It will have to be carried out in the manner most advantageous to the public interests. It having been decided that the estimates and accounts of the Irrigation Branch of the Department shall, from the 1st April next, be separated from those of the general branch of the Public Works Department, it is necessary that the grants for the two departments, including establishment and tools and plant, should be likewise kept distinct. In this view, the ordinary grant for the ensuing official year is distributed as follows:—

Public Works	£1,330,000	£1,690,896
Agricultural	670,000	697,104

Total £2,000,000 ... £2,388,000

For extraordinary irrigation works the aggregate of the demands submitted by Government and Administration amounts to 24 millions sterling. But as these demands have been heretofore invariably over-estimated, the Governor-general in Council considers that one million sterling will be sufficient to meet all probable demands on account of these works for 1872-73, and the total grant for the year for extraordinary irrigation works will accordingly be limited to that amount. If, during the course of the year, it should appear that a larger sum from loan funds can with advantage be spent, the Government of India will be prepared to consider the propriety of making extra grants. In addition to the irrigation works extraordinary, there will be the charge for the construction of State Railways, and probably the bridge over the Hooghly River, the allotments for which will be determined hereafter. The total grant to be distributed in these orders amounts to three millions sterling, viz.:—

Public Works, ordinary	£1,130,000
Agricultural—
Ordinary	£670,000
Extraordinary	1,000,000
	1,670,000

IRRIGATION IN ORISSA.

From H.M.'s Secretary of State for India to H.E. the Governor general of India in Council.

London, July 27, 1871.

MY LORD,—I have received and perused with interest the papers transmitted by your Excellency's Despatch No. 35, of March 6 last, relative to the irrigation works in Orissa, which has recently come into the possession of your Government by purchase from the late East Indian Irrigation and Canal Company.

2. Among the papers is a comprehensive review of the whole scheme by the Chief Engineer for Irrigation in Bengal, which seems on moderate data, and according to which the estate and prospects of the works are much more satisfactory than had been previously supposed. The amount already expended on them is stated at 117 lakhs, and the amount required to complete them is estimated at about 160 lakhs more; but the total net revenue is expected eventually to be at least 4½ lakhs, or 16 per cent. on the outlay; and both such experience as had already been afforded by the works themselves and analogous experience elsewhere warrant the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate.

3. I am glad, therefore, to observe that your Excellency in Council is now satisfied of the expediency of prosecuting the works gradually to conclusion, and that, besides according formal sanction to a considerable amount of past expenditure, and conditional authorisation to a further outlay of Rs. 22,38,400, for which my sanction is required, you have issued instructions for the careful preparation of plans and estimates for the remaining portions of the scheme. Executive operations should, in my opinion, be pushed on henceforward as fast as possible, consistently with due regard to the danger of an excessive rise in the price of labour, and to the disposition shown by the cultivators to avail themselves of the new facilities offered for irrigation and navigation.

4. The estimates just adverted to, amounting to Rs. 22,38,400, are hereby sanctioned. ARGYLL.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF SUPREME GOVERNMENT TO THE HOME GOVERNMENT.

6. "The estimates comprised in the second and third sections of the high level canal, provisionally sanctioned by us, are in round numbers:—

Weirs across the River Brahmince	Rs. 4,92,000
Main canal, second section, thirteen miles... ..	4,62,400
Weirs across the Byturnee	2,24,000
Main canal, third section	7,60,000
Distributaries on second section	2,00,000
Ditto on third ditto	1,00,000

Total Rs. 22,38,400

"The area which will be brought within reach of irrigation by these works, as stated in the Chief Engineer's reports, amounts to 230,000 acres, of which the estimates now sanctioned provide for distributive works capable of supplying 150,000 acres.

7. "Your Grace will observe that we continue to be still impressed with the necessity which exists of special legislation with the object of securing more completely to the Government a return from these great works."

MANUAL OF FAMILY MEDICINE FOR INDIA.

The following Order, issued by the Government of India, in the Department of Agriculture, Revenue, and Commerce, is published for general information:—

No. 432.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Department of Agriculture, Revenue, and Commerce, dated Simla, Oct. 31, 1871.

[GENERAL.]

Read—

A Memorandum, dated Sept. 23, by the Officiating Inspector general of Forests, asking for permission to print, for circulation to forest officers, a manual of directions for the use of common medicines, and the treatment of some of the most common diseases.

Read also—

A Memorandum, dated Oct. 2, on the above, by the Secretary in this department, suggesting the advisability of compiling and printing for general use by officers whose duties compel them to reside very frequently beyond the reach of medical aid—e.g., officers in the Customs, Opium, Forests, Public Works, and other departments—a simple, brief, and concise medical vaide mecum.

OBSERVATIONS.—A simple and concise popular work on medicine suited to the wants of non-professional persons in this country has long been wanted. To the many officers of the forest, survey, customs, opium, and other departments who are scattered over India in situations far removed from medical advice, simple instructions for the treatment of accidents, of diseases, and especially of those tropical diseases which are most common, and which require early treatment, would, it is believed, prove of much service, not only for their own use, but also for the use of their families and establishments. Such a work could not take the place of proper medical advice, nor is it proposed that it should be resorted to where such advice can be obtained, but, in the absence of such assistance, much might be done, and probably many lives might be saved, if a manual, well suited to the circumstances, accompanied by a small medicine chest, were placed in the hands of all those who have no other guide.

2. Such a work, however, to be really useful, must be extremely simple and concise. It must contain no technical terms, and it should deal with as few remedies as possible. With this object, all the medicines recommended as absolutely essential should first be enumerated, their action explained, and the proper doses, both for adults and children, stated. (Small medicine boxes will be hereafter distributed, arranged expressly with reference to this first chapter.) In the next chapter, the symptoms of the chief diseases, and the treatment which is best suited to each, should be described. A third chapter should be devoted to the diagnosis and cure of accidents; and a fourth should contain general instructions for preserving health, especially in those circumstances of exposure and of residence in unhealthy localities which so frequently attach to the performance of duty.

RESOLUTION.—H.E. the Viceroy and Governor general in Council has resolved to offer a prize of Rs. 1,000 for the best manual of this kind (special regard being had to brevity and simplicity) which shall be submitted on or before Oct. 15, 1872. Manuscripts should be sent to the Inspector-General of Hospitals, Indian Medical Department, Calcutta, superscribed "Manual of Family Medicine for India." A sealed envelope should accompany each, the outside bearing a motto, and containing within the name of the author. The work will be the property of the Government, and will be published with any additions or omissions that Government may deem necessary at the public expense, bearing the author's name.

PROFESSOR FAWCETT ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

In the course of his speech at Brighton on Monday last Mr. Fawcett made the following remarks:—

"Before I conclude these remarks, I am anxious for a few moments to direct your attention to a subject which is unhappily seldom alluded to at a political meeting. You probably may have been struck with the fact, which has certainly produced a most painful impression upon my mind, that in the numberless speeches which, during the recess, have been delivered by ministers and by statesmen of high authority, not one single moment's consideration has been vouchsafed to India. The representative of our great dependency in the House of Commons recently met his constituents at Elgin. Although he apparently had time to say many strange and grotesque things about every conceivable subject under the sun, he could not condescend to give a moment's attention to India. The most trumpery question that was ever brought before Parliament, a wrangle about the purchase of a picture, a squabble about the making of a road through St. James's-park, a quarrel about the claims of rival architects, seem to excite more attention in Parliament than the welfare of 180,000,000 of our Indian fellow-subjects. Constituencies, it is said, take no interest in the subject; let me emphatically warn you that if we continue to do in the future that which has been done in the past, the day is not far distant when the Indian question will disturb every English home from John-o'-Groat's to the Land's End. We have so mismanaged the affairs of that country that her finances are in a state of chronic confusion; our extravagance and our bungling have been such that taxation is rapidly increasing, debt is already accumulating; and each year deficits succeed each other with unerring regularity. Fourteen years ago, Mr. Bright, in one of the finest speeches which even that great orator ever delivered, bitterly condemned our administration of India, because, he said, we permitted £32,000,000 to be annually spent, and we had piled up a debt of £60,000,000. During the fourteen years that have elapsed since that time, the annual expenditure has increased from £32,000,000 to £53,800,000, and the debt, instead of being £60,000,000, is £180,000,000. Of this amount, about £80,000,000 has been spent in public works. These have been so ill devised and so extravagantly constructed, that, upon the aggregate outlay, the returns are insufficient to pay the interest upon the money borrowed, and a considerable portion of the money has been altogether lost. Unless the English people bring some pressure to bear upon their Government, there is no chance of arresting this career of reckless prodigality; and if it is persisted in we shall find, when it is too late to retrieve the errors of the past, that we are involved in one of the greatest disasters that ever befel our country. If expenditure in India goes on at its present rate, it will soon be necessary to raise five or ten millions of additional taxation in that country, and I have never yet found an Indian statesman who has been able to suggest how this increased revenue could be obtained without producing an amount of discontent which would make the most prudent tremble for the loyalty of the Indian people. You are probably aware that a select committee sat during the whole of last session upon Indian Finance. As yet we have scarcely passed the threshold of our inquiry; but if you will take the trouble to read the evidence which has been given, you will find that it contains disclosures which cast a serious blemish upon the reputation of our country. The India-office in Victoria-street is a costly establishment maintained by Indian taxpayers. We have assumed the responsibility of, to a great extent, governing India in this country, and yet her affairs are wilfully and habitually neglected by successive Cabinets. A high official in his evidence stated that whenever the interests of India and England are supposed to be in conflict our Government always allows the former country to go to the wall. All kinds of charges are thrown upon India which she ought not to bear. The official to whom I have first alluded, when referring to the fact that India was compelled to share the loss involved in some disastrous telegraph speculation into which the English Government had entered, said that if the Indian Government were an individual A, and the English Government an individual B, that the conduct of B to A would be considered uncommonly sharp practice, to which A would not submit if he had the power to help it. But I can quote the opinion of one whose authority will, perhaps, come more home to you. You are aware that Mr. Laing once held the highest financial office in India, and he has publicly declared that Indian finance is constantly being sacrificed to the wishes of the Horse Guards, and to the exigencies of English estimates. Can any one who cares for the reputation of our country consent to remain passive while such an imputation rests upon our national honour? The people of India, it is true, have not votes; they cannot bring as much pressure to bear upon Parliament as can be brought by one of our great railway companies; but, with some confidence, I believe that I shall not be misinterpreting your wishes if, as your representative, I do whatever can be done by one humble individual to render justice to the defenceless and powerless. As a constituency you will never have reason to regret that you have expressed a desire that the English Parliament should not be less solicitous for the welfare of the Indian people than it is for the welfare of the English nation."

Miscellaneous.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £500,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 17th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £336,200; to Bombay, £150,000, and to Madras, £13,800. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 22 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 24 per cent. Those above in full.

THE LOSS OF THE "DELAWARE."—The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the Delaware, which was wrecked on the Scilly Islands on December 28, has been held at Liverpool, before Mr. Raffles, stipendiary magistrate, assisted by Captain Harris and Mr. Robert Galloway, engineer and surveyor to the Board of Trade, as nautical assessors. Captain Charles John Fisher said he commanded the Delaware both before and after she was lengthened. The lengthening of the ship had no prejudicial effect upon either her sailing or steering qualities. This concluded the evidence, and Mr. Raffles said that, as there was no one before the court, no judgment would be pronounced. A report has been forwarded to the Board of Trade, declaring that the late master of the vessel shaped a course far too near the Scilly coasts for the safety of such a ship, especially in tempestuous weather.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.—Her Majesty's Indian troop relief screw steamship Euphrates, Capt. Curme, arrived at Spithead on Jan. 8 from Bombay, via the Suez Canal, and next morning steamed into Portsmouth Harbour to disembark the 38th Regt. of Infantry and other troops she had brought home, as follows:—Col. The troops were forwarded per rail to their several destinations, the 38th Regt. going on by special train to Dover, where the regiment will for the present be stationed—the time-expired men to the general depot at Chichester, and the invalids to the Royal Victoria Military Hospital at Netley.

DEPARTURE OF TROOPS FOR INDIA.—Her Majesty's Indian troop relief steamship Crocodile, Capt. George H. Parkin, was appointed to sail from Portsmouth on Jan. 12, for Bombay, via the Suez Canal, with Royal Artillery and draughts of other corps on board, but after the pilot was on board to navigate her out of the harbour to Spithead, and the order had been given for the engines to "go ahead" from alongside the jetty where she had been berthed, it was found that something was so far the matter with the engines that the ship could not be started. It was believed by the engineer officers belonging to the dockyard and to the ship that some floating substance had got into and choked the Kingston valve inlet of the centrifugal condensing pump. The ship in consequence was placed in dock during the afternoon, with the troops on board, but it is expected that she will be taken out again this day's tide and started on her voyage. Supposing that it is really nothing more than a piece of wood, or any other substance, that has got into the Kingston valve of the inlet pipe to the condensers, there remains the fact that one of the largest and most expensive of all our troop-ships had to be put through the expense of docking, and the commencement of the voyage deferred, with upwards of a thousand people on board, because no means could be brought forward by the dockyard authorities to save such a waste of time and of money. A diver was certainly sent down while the ship lay alongside the dockyard, but as he was merely a "seaman" diver from the Excellent, he knew nothing of the valve mechanism of the bottom of the ship, and therefore did not discover the fault. The next day, however, the ship was undocked, after clearing the choked valve inlet, and after testing the working of her machinery at Spithead, she sailed for Queenstown, Malta, and Bombay. Her Majesty's Indian troop-relief steamship Euphrates, Capt. D'Arcy Irvine, will sail from Portsmouth for Bombay, via the Suez Canal, on Feb. 6, with the 69th

Infantry and draughts from other corps, and will call in at Queenstown to receive other draughts there from Dublin and the Curragh. She will sail from Queenstown on Feb. 10, is due at Port Said on the 25th, Suez the 29th, and Bombay on March 15. She will leave Bombay for England again, with invalids, on April 1, and return, via the Cape of Good Hope, calling at Bepore, Mauritius, and Simon's Town for military and naval invalids or time-expired men. She may be expected to arrive at Spithead about June 4. Her Majesty's Indian troop-relief steamship Malabar, Capt. Sholto Douglas, will embark draughts at Portsmouth and sail on Jan. 24, for Bombay, via the Suez Canal, calling in at Queenstown, and sailing thence on the 28th inst. She is due at Port Said on the 13th proximo, and at Bombay on March 3. She will leave Bombay on her homeward voyage on March 20, arriving at Suez on April 4, and leaving Port Said on April 8, and will arrive at Spithead on April 23.

Second Edition, with Additions.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the (Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good dis-ciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benyon-house, 32, Cullford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

By J. FORBES WATSON, M.A., M.D., F.R.A.S.,

Reporter on the Products of India.

Folio, half-morocco, with numerous coloured Photographs. 23. 5s.

This work—by affording a Key to the Fashions of the People, and to the Cotton, Silk, and Wool Textiles in actual use in India—is of special interest to Manufacturers, Merchants, and Agents; as also to the student and lover of ornamental art.

"We congratulate Dr. Forbes Watson on having produced so useful and so practical a work, and on having diffused knowledge upon all material points connected with the clothing of the people of India, which heretofore had been unattainable. His book is written in a clear and thoroughly intelligible style throughout; it is handsomely got up, and embellished by numerous coloured photographs, from which the various styles of costume and portion of clothing, male and female, will be more readily understood than from mere description. The colours, too, of the various fabrics are given from the articles themselves, and we would in particular invite attention to the plates at page 118, all or most being figures of respectable Mohammedans in Upper India, in rich dresses, as conveying excellent impressions of colour and effect in Native Indian costume."—Times.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Jan. 8; Agra and Madras, Jan. 6; Calcutta, Jan. 5. This is the first mail which has left Bombay under the new system on a Monday. It is proverbially hard to please everybody, and the Bombay people are not the more reconciled to the inconveniences of the new arrangement because, according to the Indian Postmaster-general, Friday and Saturday are convenient days of departure from Calcutta and Madras. Mr. Hogg hopes that the Bombay merchants will submit to a necessary evil inflicted on them for the general good, and reminds them that last year they did acquiesce in the arrangement to which they now again demur. In reply, they virtually deny the alleged acquiescence, and point out the peculiar hardships to which they are henceforth exposed. The inevitable pressure of work at the last moment will oblige them either to work all through Sunday or to leave much of their business over to the following week. In Bombay, unlike Calcutta, the chief firms dispense as a rule with brokers, doing all the shipping business themselves. With the mail closing at two P.M. on Monday, the banks must, for their own sakes, refuse to take bills after noon. Even by working on Sundays, the Bombay merchants will never get all their shipping documents and market reports complete in good time. "In a word," they say through their Chamber of Commerce, "the new arrangement, while it will certainly have the effect of turning Sunday into a regular business day, will even then not enable Bombay merchants to get through their current business with that order and despatch which are the first conditions of all well-conducted business." The choice seems indeed to lie between working on Sundays at Bombay, if the mail leaves on Monday, and losing part of the Saturday half-holiday at Calcutta, if the mail started a day later. Surely it would be possible in this matter to please Bombay without much annoying Calcutta. Even then however we should expect to hear a cry of suffering from Australia, which, it seems, is already complaining of the delay in forwarding the Australian mails to England.

THE news brought by the mail from the Loshai Expedition dates down to New Year's-day from the Left or Bouchier's Column, and only to the 25th December from the Right or Brownlow's Column. At the latter date Colonel Macpherson was to rejoin General Brownlow, from a spot on the second range eastward of Vanoonah's village. By that time Colonel Macpherson had destroyed three villages, one of which is marked in the map as Lalpoetal. Two days earlier Major Macintyre had returned to camp after destroying two villages, one of which was stockaded, besides rice-granaries reckoned to hold about 8,000 maunds; to say nothing of the "gayals," pigs, and poultry, which were no doubt converted to the use of our troops. The rice being in husk could not be readily turned to their account. The Kookies on these occasions appear to flee at once in wholesome dread of the little Ghoorkas who generally lead the attack. One of the villages thus burnt contained 118 houses, "all new and clean." In a four days' raid Major Macintyre seems to have burnt 192 dwelling houses, with fifty-eight granaries containing 150 tons of rice.

On Christmas-day General Bouchier was still encamped in a Kolell village. He, too, had been engaged in destroying villages and granaries, and the same process was repeated on the 25th, when, after "a little opposition," and the wounding of three sepoys, the village was burned, and one dead Loshai brought into camp. If the Loshais cannot save their villages, they send their scouts to prowl about the British camp, and try to pick off unwary sentries. In this, however, they do not seem to have succeeded. Some days before then a large body of them fell suddenly on a small escort of Ghoorkas, one of whom was killed before help came from the camp. On the 27th December General Bouchier had gone further up the Tipai, and encamped on the Toweeboon, "a fine open spot," where he purposed forming a depot for supplies. On his way thither his troops had burnt another village with its surrounding granaries. On their way through the jungle they were worried with "sharpshooters," who managed, it seems, to wound a sapper and a coolie before the jungle could be cleared. For three miles beyond camp the country was reconnoitred, but no traces of an enemy were to be seen. The weather was reported fine but very cold, the troops and coolies were in excellent health, and all the wounded doing well. The road so far had been very difficult, but was being got ready for the passage of elephants. The force remaining at Tipai Mukh was 400 strong. On the 29th the same General took 200 of the 42nd to Kolell and the other villages burnt on the 23rd, in order to help the Survey Department and to show the Loshais that he could go where he liked. Some of these however fired on his advance, slightly wounding one of his men. Soon afterwards some of Poiboy's messengers met him with the Kolell people. They owned to having suffered heavily both in life and property, and offered terms which the General was considering when he sent his last telegram. No more fighting had taken place to the 1st January, when General Bouchier's camp was pitched in latitude 21 deg. 6m. 40s.; longitude 93 deg. 7m. 30s. One of the 44th had died of his wounds. The whole of his loss up to date was three killed, fourteen wounded. The wounded were sent back on the 31st December to Tipai Mukh. Envoys from Poiboy and other chiefs had arrived in camp bearing presents of elephant-tusks. All in camp were still well, and road-making went on steadily.

called Jeesa, the property of Savoongo's son, situated ten miles west of Syloo. Sakmoon village was strongly stockaded, but was reduced at 1,000 yards by Hill's guns. Three hundred horses were captured. The little girl Winchester has been given up to our ally, Sookpilal, and is expected in camp.

In the Delhi Camp of Exercise the real work of the gathering had begun. On the 4th January the 2nd and 3rd Divisions went into their bell-tents, leaving most of their baggage in the standing camps. Not more than fifteen camels are allowed for 120 officers, the complement of a whole Division, while two carry all the cooking-pots of a single regiment. On the 5th the 2nd Division was to march to Gharonda on the Jumna. According to the plan of the campaign, this division under General M'Murdo, with Fraser's Cavalry Brigade, were to take up a line from Badli-ke-Serai on the Kurnal road to Yeroda on the Jumna, while the remainder of the forces under General Francis would move against it from Alipore. Surveys of the surrounding country were being steadily pushed forward by the Quarter-Master General's Staff. Lord Napier himself has been ubiquitous, but his chief interest was centered on the work of his own special service, the Engineers. Among other tasks, the Sappers and Miners have thrown a pontoon bridge under his eyes across the Jumna in little more than an hour, at a point where it is 330 feet broad. The scene of the manoeuvres embraces a good deal of cultivated ground, from which the troops are to be warned off as from "deep water."

At the last meeting of the Viceregal Council, Mr. G. Campbell demanded and obtained a fortnight's delay in the further consideration of Mr. F. Stephen's Oath and Declaration Bill, which provides certain oaths and forms of declaration suitable to all kinds of Indian beliefs. Mr. Campbell laughs to scorn the idea of a "solemn declaration" as a substitute for native oaths. If he would tell his hearers what forms of oath would infallibly bind the natives in a court of justice, he would deserve the thanks of all who have to deal with Indian witnesses.

FROM the latest telegram we learn that the report that Seetapore and Benares were to cease being stations for European troops is unfounded, that an envoy from the King of Bokhara has arrived at Calcutta, and that the Kooka outbreak has been entirely suppressed. Thirty-nine persons have been executed.

LORD MAYO's intended visit to Orissa has doubtless some connection with the disclosures lately published in the Bengal Government Gazette concerning the arbitrary proceedings of the Orissa zemindars. Mr. Campbell at any rate, who is to meet his Lordship in Orissa, has openly denounced the landholders of that province as "a specially unscrupulous and incorrigible set of men, in dealing with whom strong measures are absolutely necessary." The Indian ryot is a patient animal, but the oppression to which he is subject in Orissa appears to exceed anything hitherto recorded of the Bengal zemindars. In one collectorate, that of Balasore, nine landholders are shown to exact eleven illegal cesses from their much-enduring ryots. Among these are telegraph rates, rates to cover the sums paid by the zemindars in support of Government schools, and on account of income-tax, and a tax to defray the cost of establishments for collecting the rents. Besides these there are seventeen occasional imposts; one on account of supplies for troops moving in the district, another for the zemindar's travelling expenses on his own estate, a third for the keep of his horses and elephants, a fourth for the wedding expenses of his son or daughter, a fifth for his own expenses on pilgrimage, and so on. Again, on his return from a pilgrimage, each ryot has to pay for a handful of the sacred food he brings back with him. Then there is the Jama Besi or enhanced rent whenever the zemindar wants money, and the Magna, a special levy raised to meet any sudden demand on the zemindar. We are also assured that some of the zemindars force their ryots to sell them rice, cloth, and other things, often at 30 per cent. below market prices; and when the poor wretch can be squeezed no further, his master forces him to labour for nothing. According to Mr. Campbell the remissions of revenue made by Government during the great Orissa famine never reached the ryot. Such appear to be the blessed fruits of the Permanent Settlement as hitherto applied in Orissa without due care to enforce the conditions laid down by Lord Cornwallis for guarding the interests of the weaker side. If this is the way in which the landholders of Orissa observe their share of the bargain made in 1789, we are not surprised to hear that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has pledged himself to use against them all the powers entrusted to him by law, and to bring their estates under the direct control of his Government. In such a move his Honour will be well supported by the Viceroy himself, nor will the good wishes of the India Office fail, we imagine, to encourage them both in the campaign against so rampant an evil.

THE question of buying Pondicherry and the other French possessions in India from their present owners has lately been brought forward by Colonel Laurie, a retired officer of Madras Artillery, who some years ago wrote the history of the Second Burmese War. The gist of his arguments has since been reproduced by more than one Indian journal, including the Madras Times, from which we quoted last week. That there is some force in them, we do not deny. Under certain conditions a hostile power seated in Pondicherry might cause some anxiety to the dwellers in Madras, and even become the centre of undesirable intrigues against our rule. It is also true enough that these patches of foreign territory, small as they are, take away from the apparent completeness of our Indian Empire, and involve some small addition to our Indian outlay in order to prevent smuggling and such like frauds on the Indian revenue. If the French are willing to part on moderate terms with the ten thousand square miles they still retain, it might perhaps be politic to close the bargain; but are they willing to sell at all, still more to sell at what we should think a reasonable price? How much could India just now afford to pay for this little Naboth's Vineyard? Would the satisfaction of enclosing it in our own ring-fence be worth the outlay? We may be in error, but for our part we see no reason to calculate on the readiness of a people like the French to part, even for a good round sum of money, with the last remnants of their old Indian colonies. If French India were never so profitless a possession, its masters might still prefer the barren honour of retaining what they won in brighter days to the pecuniary advantage of selling it to a wealthy purchaser. The purchase of Goa would in various ways tend more to our advantage than the purchase of Pondicherry; but we have not heard that the Portuguese are willing to part with Goa. As for the mischief that such bits of foreign ground might cause us in the event of war, that is a question which hardly deserves considering. If France or Portugal went to war with England, Goa and Pondicherry would have to change masters long before either of them could render us the slightest harm.

WE have given elsewhere the Duke of Argyll's reply to the memorials lately received at the India Office from the Chambers of Commerce at Manchester and other large towns. The memorialists had complained of the continued exclusion of eminent English merchants from the home Council of India, in spite of the pledges offered last year by the Ministry to the supporters of Mr. Graves's motion. They took particular umbrage at the late appointment of Sir Henry Maine, "who, though a gentleman of undoubted ability, they believe has never had any connection with commerce," and they called on her Majesty's Government to take early measures for placing on the Indian Council "a due proportion of members having a practical acquaintance with trade." His Grace in reply avows his hearty concurrence in the wish expressed by Mr. Gladstone, that the varied elements of the old East India Board should be introduced into the present Council, and pleads the appointment of Sir H. Maine in proof of his readiness to carry out Mr. Gladstone's views. To our thinking indeed such an appointment needs no defence; but whether it was likely to satisfy the particular cravings of Manchester and Liverpool, is quite another question. They asked for more merchants in the council-room of the India Office, and the Government has given them an "eminent man who did not belong to the Indian services, but who combined great general attainments and a high reputation at home with fresh knowledge of the most difficult and urgent questions of legislation in India." A true statesman, in short, of the highest mark has been added to the home council of the Indian Minister, but that is in effect the very grievance of which the memorialists complained. They had expressed "their grave disappointment" at the preference of one so gifted to somebody "having a practical acquaintance with trade." Let us hope that Manchester will be better pleased with the sop now offered it in the person of Sir Louis Malet, "whose long and able services at the Board of Trade, and whose intimate acquaintance with commercial questions, are well-known to the commercial classes of this country."

THE First Annual Report of the National Indian Association shows the gratifying progress already made by a society first organised at Bristol in June 1870, for the purpose of helping the natives of India to improve themselves in accordance with the latest results of Western experience. It might perhaps be objected that the improvement should begin at home; but the special items of the society's programme have a fairly practical look, and native Indian reformers will no doubt be thankful for any aid they can receive from England in their uphill fight against old use and wont. The special aims of the Association are to promote the education of the masses, the education and improvement of the women, sanitary and prison reforms, and to encourage native Indians in this country by means of friendly intercourse in studying such of our institutions as may benefit theirs. All this it undertakes on the principle of strict non-interference with India's social and religious customs. With a view to improve the women of India, large boxes of needlework, books, pictures, and other such presents, have been forwarded to Bombay, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, and a few other places. An Industrial School has, with the Society's aid, already been established at Ranchi, in Chota Nagpore, and a grant of money has been assigned towards the infants' school which Baboo Sasipada Banerjee is by this time setting up in Barahanagar. At the beginning of last year the Committee started a monthly journal, which has been the means of diffusing much useful information and bringing fresh subscriptions to their treasury. Many of the contributors have been native gentlemen. One of these, for instance, Baboo Woomesh Chandar Sen, gives an interesting account of his own labours in the cause of social progress among the Koles of Ranchi. A good many pages are filled with accounts of Mr. Banerjee's appearances in Birmingham, London, Leeds, and several other places, where he discoursed to good effect on the need of educating the masses, raising the social state of Indian women, and founding industrial schools and reformatories. As an illustration of the futile penal system now in vogue, Mr. Banerjee quoted the case of a boy of fourteen who, only two days after he had been flogged for a petty theft, was brought up again and punished for a like offence. "What shall I do?" he said, in answer to the magistrate's questions; "I have nothing to eat; my friends will not take me in; the Court will whip me, and turn me out into the streets."

THE name of Mr. Cowasjee Jehangheer Readymoney, one of the great Parsee merchants of Bombay, has long been noted as that of one of her foremost benefactors. His latest known act of almsgiving, the present of £200 for the use of our English poor, as a thank-offering for the recovery of the Prince of Wales, does equal honour to the donor's loyalty and his munificence. Mr. Readymoney's London agents consulted his Royal Highness as to the best way of laying out the money, and in accordance with the spirit of the Prince's suggestion the whole amount has been handed over to the London Fever Hospital.

SOME of our readers will have noticed with regret the death of the Hon. Walter Coningsby Erskine, Earl of Kellie, at Cannes, on the 15th of this month. The deceased nobleman, who was born in 1810, entered the Bengal Army in 1827, and rose to be a major in the old 73rd Native Infantry. As a captain of that regiment he served during the Sutlej Campaign of 1845-6, and shared in the crowning victory of Sobraon. Not long afterwards Capt. Erskine exchanged his regimental duties for civil employ, and rose to be a Commissioner for the Jubbulpore Division. In this capacity Major Erskine did the Government such useful service during the Mutiny that he was honoured with the thanks of the Viceroy in Council and the ribbon of a C.B. Shortly before his death the late Earl published without his name a succinct and interesting account of the Mutiny and after events in the Saugor and Nerbudda Provinces. In 1861 Colonel Erskine resigned the Service, and came home to succeed in 1866 to the Earldom of Kellie, on the death of the former Earl of Mar and Kellie. His claim to the Earldom of Mar also was still unsettled at his death. Lord Kellie sat in Parliament as a Scotch peer, and always took a kindly interest in the welfare of the service to which he had belonged for more than thirty years. In the last days of the last session his voice was heard insisting on the right of the old Indian officers to compensation for their bonuses on the terms already secured by statute to the rest of the British army.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, January 30, 1872.

INDIAN GRATITUDE.

IN one of his recent letters the Calcutta correspondent of the Times tells a story of a Bengal Mohammedan who, on obtaining a remission of income-tax overcharged to him, forwarded most of the surplus to the kind missionary by whose means the remission had been procured. Mr. Glyn, a former magistrate of Bareilly, writing to the same journal, caps the story with "a yet more striking instance of gratitude in a Hindu of the Upper Provinces." Many years ago the magistrate in question procured the pardon and release of some Hindu prisoners who had been doomed to imprisonment for life on account of a rising in which they had taken a prominent part. One day Mr. Glyn, who had meanwhile been removed to Meerut, was surprised to see a messenger from Bareilly appear before him with "a bag of Pillibheet rice sent by the head dealer of the bazaar, one of the released Hindu prisoners, as a thank-offering for his deliverance," and every two years the same thank-offering reached him during the man's lifetime.

That such instances of gratitude are by no means rare in India, can only be doubted by those whose knowledge of native character is confined either to its lowest specimens, or to hearsay gathered from onesided or untrustworthy witnesses. The natives of India, said Mountstuart Elphinstone, "are often accused of want of gratitude, but it does not appear that those who have made the charge have done much to inspire such a sentiment." Mr. Elliot, the Mysore planter, tells a good story to the point:—

Years ago, and when there were only four planters on one side of the province, the treasury ran dry, and we could not therefore obtain cash for the bills we had presented for payment. To me the matter was nothing, for I simply sent into the villages round about and borrowed from my native neighbours. But, when I visited a friend some twelve miles off, I found him disconsolate, and without a rupee to pay his coolies with. I told him I had no difficulty in obtaining money. "Here," he answered, "the disobliging, ungrateful beasts won't lend me a farthing." "Did you ever lend them one when they wanted money?" I asked. "Well, no," he answered, evidently staggered, "I never did." ("Experiences of a Planter," vol. I., p. 93.)

Are there not many of our countrymen in India who, like Mr. Elliot's friend, look out for unreasonable returns for kindness never shown? Even if gratitude were no more than "a lively sense of favours to come," its source would still be traceable to favours received. One good turn will beget another, but gratitude for nothing is a virtue unknown on this earth, however ardently some people appear to believe in its existence. Complaints of ingratitude generally issue from the lips of those who place an extravagant value on their own merits, and expect all the world to judge with their own eyes. The higher their opinion of themselves, the more keenly do they resent the manifest blindness of the outside crowd to the light shed forth upon it by their presence. No one gifted with less than super-human virtue could ever rise to the full height of their demands on other people's gratitude. These are they who complain most loudly of the thankless conduct of children, friends, or servants, as if the fault in such cases lay as a thing of course on any side but their own. In India this kind of feeling often deepens the dark views which too many Englishmen are prone to form of the native character. Ignorance and race-prejudice lead them into strange mistakes and unfair generalisations. They judge the whole garden by a few of its poorest fruits, and even these they probably misjudge. Their reading of native character is about as accurate as that which an uninformed foreigner might give of Englishmen after a short stay among the slums of Portsmouth or in the neighbourhood of Leicester-square. Every good or harmless trait of Hindu feeling or practice has thus been widely misunderstood. Ward, the pious Serampore missionary, was not ashamed to speak of the Hindus as "destitute of generosity, patriotism, and gratitude; as disobedient to parents, grossly impure, false, litigious, cruel, treacherous, covetous, ostentatious, destitute of compassion." A picture less true on the whole to fact it would not have been easy to draw, and yet, in spite of the very different testimony borne by such men as Malcolm, Elphinstone, Warren Hastings, Munro, Heber, the Abbé Dubois, Sir H. Edwards, libels of this stupid sort have gained but too wide a currency among our countrymen. So thorough indeed is the average Englishman's intolerance of Indian ways, that what in his own country he would deem a mere phrase of polished courtesy becomes in a Hindu mouth a lie; and a poetic figure of speech from your Hindu servant stamps him as a rogue or a cur.

With special regard to the virtue of gratitude, not a few have argued after Ward himself that such a sentiment can have no place in the hearts of a people whose language has no name for the sentiment itself. We might as well argue that the feeling of ennui is unknown in England, because the name for it has been borrowed from France. Even if it were literally true that the Hindus have no word to express gratitude or thanks, what could that signify so long as they had the feeling itself and knew how to express it in some intelligible way? In point of fact they have words enough, whether of home or foreign birth, to convey the required meaning, if the gestures used by them for the same purpose needed the further emphasis of uttered speech. Could anything be prettier or more expressive than the way in which a native will raise his joined hands to his head, or bow his head to the ground in token of the gratitude his countrymen are accused of never feeling? Their very religion, and they are among the most religious people in the world, tends to encourage the practice of this particular virtue. The old Hindu literature furnishes ample evidence on the same side. Expressions of praise and thankfulness to the Gods swarm throughout the Vedas. In Kālidāsa's "Messenger Cloud" are some lines which, translated literally, run thus: "Even a low man, when his friend comes to him for assistance, will not turn away his face in consideration of former likeness: how therefore should the exalted act thus!" Another old Indian poem, as translated by Mr. Griffith of Benares College, treats of ingratitude as the most unpardonable of all sins. For every other sinner, even for him who sheds the blood of a Brahman, some hope of forgiveness remains possible;

But never can the thankless man
Be pardoned for his crime;
Disgrace and shame shall hunt his name
Through life and endless time.

That the virtue whose opposite is thus denounced may be found in all parts of India by those who care to look for it, is a fact which no unprejudiced observer can deny. During his long residence in Mysore Mr. Elliot found his Indian neighbours just as ready to serve him as he was to serve them. Whatever they lacked in words was amply compensated by their deeds. If he lent them money, gave them medicine, or did them any other kindness, however trifling, they were sure to requite him in various ways. The bottle of medicine would be returned full of honey, the neighbour's cattle would be sent to plough up his garden, the straw for thatching his house would be offered him as a free gift. And such experiences have occurred elsewhere to everyone who has given the natives of India fair play. How many English men and women owed their lives during the Mutiny to the gratitude of those they had in some way befriended? Who has not heard some tale of grateful affection displayed towards this or that English officer by the people among whom he had dwelt and done good for years?

But indeed we are ashamed to argue further against the utterly groundless notion that the Hindus as a people know nothing of gratitude. It is possible of course that some races like some individuals may be wholly wanting in a virtue which tends so much to sweeten life. But to this category the Hindu belongs even less than the Englishman, and the Anglo-Indian whose experience leads him to so unjust a conclusion must be among the most unfortunate or the least discerning of men.

OUR LAWS FOR INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The editor of a leading London journal lately remarked that, whatever the shortcomings of our Administration in India had been, we had at all events given the natives good laws. His Calcutta correspondent has shown us how much, since 1858, we have been indebted for our laws to the legal member of Council, and how little inclination his colleagues have shown to interfere with him.

If we can believe in the excellence of these laws we must pronounce our legislative successes to be marvellous. How can one man, unacquainted with the language, habits, customs, and ancient laws of one hundred and fifty millions of souls of various nationalities and creeds, prepare at short notice laws adapted to their wants?

In England upwards of six hundred legislators carefully discuss every proposed law. The House of Lords afterwards, assisted by the most eminent members of her Majesty's Privy Council, strike out every objectionable clause. Hundreds of newspapers ventilate throughout the country the anticipated effect of the new enactment, and few laws are passed without the concurrence of public opinion. How different is the course pursued in India. A lawyer is sent out from England, to reside part of the year at Calcutta and part at Simla, to prepare the newest fashion of law for divers nations and creeds who date back their own laws, some twelve, some nineteen, and some thirty-three centuries!

Do the natives love us for our interference with their ancient laws? I leave Mr. Nassau Lees and others to describe how the Mahomedans dislike our conceited attempts to legislate for them. The Hindoos have few advocates. They depend upon their own vis inertiae to frustrate our ill-timed innovations. Many of them charitably look upon us as insane, and appeal from the Philips of the present day to the Philips sober of the future.

There are two great divisions of legislation, which it will be well to discuss separately:—

1st. The Criminal Laws.

2nd. The Civil Laws.

1st. Our Criminal Laws. It is very easy to compile a Criminal Code, but very difficult to compile one which shall guide magistrates and judges in inflicting deterrent, but not Draconic punishment. Our Anglo-Saxon roughness and vanity disable us from compiling a good Criminal Code—roughness, because we inflict Draconic punishments for offences against our commercial susceptibilities; vanity, because we refuse to believe that other nations require scales of punishments different from our own. Our proceedings against crime in India, when effective, have usually been quite independent of the common law —non-regulation is the term used. For instances, Sleeman's proceedings against the Thugs, Sir Charles Napier's proceedings against the hill tribes, Outram's management of the Bheels, Nicholson's and Herbert Edwards's action against the offenders trans-Indus. When the Mutiny broke out, we were obliged to override the Criminal Law. We dared not fill our jails; we had to flog and fine instead.

Some Englishmen, I believe, boast of our Indian Penal Code as the best existing in the world. Its chief author was Macaulay, and his original Code contains some curious illustrations of the way he went to work. What is criminal trespass? This is a crime which has puzzled hundreds of magistrates. Macaulay, it is said, went to a review at Dum-Dum, and his carriage took up an excellent position. Stocqueler, the Editor of the Englishman, noticing this, got on the top of the carriage. Macaulay insisted on Stocqueler's dismounting. Stocqueler refused. Macaulay went home, and noted in his Penal Code that it was criminal trespass to remain on the top of a carriage when the owner had ordered the trespasser to descend. The punishment afterwards enacted was one month's imprisonment or fine, or both. Experientia docet.

A few years ago a distinguished officer of Government, a magistrate in charge of a district, tried a girl for bigamy under Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code, and her parents for aiding and abetting the same. The girl was sentenced to five years' imprisonment, and her parents were also very severely punished. The girl's first husband had heartlessly deserted her; and her parents, in order to prevent her prostituting herself, had married her again, with the full consent of their relations and neighbours of the same caste. The Commissioner referred the case to the Judicial Commissioner, who ordered the release of the parents, but ruled that the sentence on the girl was legal, though he reduced the imprisonment from five years to one month.

The Penal Code is therefore solely responsible for the one month's imprisonment of that innocent girl in a felon's jail. Under Section 497 of the same Code the girl could not have been punished even had she, without going through the marriage ceremony, prostituted herself to a dozen men. It is no easy matter to secure chastity on the part of young widows in the tropics, and we have acknowledged this difficulty in the agitation for legalising widow marriages. T.

NATIVE PRINCES OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Permit me to offer a few remarks in reply to Mr. E. H. Palmer's letter in your issue of the 16th of January. He states that he has read your report of my lecture on "The Princes of India" with "considerable astonishment." I can assure him that the feeling is a reciprocal one, and that he cannot be more astonished at my opinions than I am at those which he has expressed in your columns. He gravely informs your readers that it is impossible to form a sound judgment upon the subject of my lecture without an intimate personal knowledge of the natives of India, and a perfect familiarity with "their language, habits, and modes of thought." If what he says be true, the Duke of Argyll is wholly unfit to be Secretary of State for India; and no member of Parliament who has not resided in that country, should venture to deliver a speech on any question of Indian policy. But the absurdity of his statement is self-evident. To determine whether a particular act is moral or immoral, just or unjust, it is only necessary to become acquainted with the facts; and a knowledge of these may be as easily acquired in England as in India. The utmost familiarity with native ideas or languages could not make black white, or alter the moral character of a transaction which violates the fundamental principles of morality. I contend, in opposition to Mr. Palmer, that a man may possess great local knowledge of India, and yet from the narrowness of his mind, or from some defect in his moral sense, be infinitely less able to recognise the claims of justice than personal strangers to India, like Mr. Bright or Professor Fawcett.

Mr. Palmer rightly assumes that I denounced Lord Dalhousie's policy in Oudh. My language was strong, but I nevertheless feel that it was not strong enough to stigmatise, as I could have desired, the moral turpitude of a policy which, at the time, excited the burning indignation of the greatest of our Parliamentary orators. But the annexation of Oudh was only incidental to my subject. I said: "We remember what arguments for annexation these great sticklers for morality based upon the profligacy of the ex-King of Oudh, and upon the state of anarchy into which his territories had fallen, through misgovernment and our own neglect; but they forgot that the rights of a nation do not depend upon the personal character of its sovereign, and that in setting an example of flagrant contempt for the binding obligation of treaties they offered an enormous provocation to retaliation." Is Mr. Palmer able to refute this line of argument? He has based his defence of the annexation of Oudh on the bad personal character of the King. He, however, cannot allege that either the King or his predecessors were wanting in good faith to the British government, because General Low declared that "in regard to their external relations with us, their conduct has been remarkably irreproachable," and further because that gallant officer cites a number of notable instances in which they proved "really active and most useful allies to us." Neither the Royal family nor the people of Oudh were responsible for the misconduct of their sovereign; and history will, I believe, record the fact that the rebellion which the violent annexation of that kingdom provoked, was as patriotic as any ever fought in Poland or Italy. Mr. Palmer also brings forward a charge of misgovernment against the authorities at Lucknow. Does he know that the state of affairs in Bengal was at least as bad as that which Lord Dalhousie made the pretext for swallowing up the Kingdom of Oudh? About the same time Mr. (now Sir Frederick) Halliday sketched this lively picture of Bengal: "The village police are in a permanent state of starvation; they are all thieves and robbers of necessity, or leagued with thieves and robbers, in so much that, when any one is robbed in a village, it is most probable that the first one suspected will be the village watchman." Can the Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge give a worse account of Oudh than Sir Frederick Halliday gave of "The Augean Stable" of Bengal?

Mr. Palmer somewhat unfortunately refers to the authority of the late General Sir William Sleeman. To him also I would make my appeal. Before the annexation he wrote as follows: "Lord Dalhousie and I have different views, I fear. If he wishes anything that I do not think right and honest, I resign, and leave it to be done by others. I desire a strict adherence to solemn engagements, whether made with white faces or black. We have no right to annex or confiscate Oude; we have a right, under the Treaty of 1837, to take the management of it, but not to appropriate its revenues to ourselves. We can do this with honour to our Government and benefit to the people. To confiscate would be dishonest and dishonourable. To annex would be to give the people a government almost as bad as their own, if we put our screw upon them." It will thus be seen, that although Mr. Palmer has no scruples as to the annexation of Oudh, General Sleeman was haunted by many. I am, of course, glad that Mr. Palmer agrees with me in thinking that the Nawab of Tonk ought not to be convicted and punished without trial; and although, without a shadow of reason, he has thought it seemly to impute interested motives to those who believe that the Nawab Nazim of Bengal is equally entitled to the benefit of an impartial investigation, and that in his case—as in others—the Indian Government ought not to be the sole judge in its own cause, I am yet of opinion that the public will insist upon the same measure of justice being meted out to both these Princes. I, of course, do not suppose that this view will be shared by those who are unable to see that what is morally wrong in England cannot be politically right in India, or who endeavour to conceal the weakness of their own cause by casting unfounded imputations on their opponents.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I have received a letter written by a Brahman in India of good standing, who has been made a Companion of the Star of India by Government for his services, the purport of which I trust you will consider worthy of publication in your pages.

My correspondent observes that, in your Mail of the 23rd ult., he read an interesting account of the great gathering of people which took place at Benares towards the close of last year, on the occasion of the Eclipse. And—present himself—he makes some pertinent remarks with reference to the scenes which he then witnessed, and which no doubt always occur upon such occasions.

Notwithstanding, he says, some wise precautionary measures which were taken by the magistrate of Benares, many dead bodies of pilgrims were found floating "near Rajghat and below Ramnuggur." "Some women and children were also missed;" and he goes on to explain that, although no doubt many of these casualties are to be attributed to accidental circumstances, such as drowning from overcrowding, others are the result of premeditated violence. The object of the bathing in the Ganges being, he observes, the cleansing from sin, the worst characters among the Hindoos are invariably to be found collected at these meetings, which, besides, afford them an excellent opportunity of carrying on unobserved in that vast crowd their nefarious practices. The Ghats of Kasi and Praag then, he says, swarm with human beings "like millions of bees sticking on one leaf;" and amidst these the cold-blooded professional murderer mixes, and selecting some woman whose jewellery promises a sufficient reward for his pains, watches his opportunity, and, in the confusion that ensues on the water, pulls her under and drowns her; or, in a still more crafty manner, concealing his head in one of those earthen ghurrahs which, being used for funeral and domestic purposes, are so often to be seen floating in the Ganges, he "treads water" in mid-stream not far from a group of women, when, suddenly diving, he seizes one of them by the legs and pulls her beneath the surface.

Such occurrences, indeed, as these seem quite possible in the hubbub and confusion which always attends these festivals; moreover, that they do really occur admits of proof. During a past year several persons of the Dhoomera Jut caste were caught and duly executed for this very practice.

My Brahman correspondent, although he can produce no panacea which will do away with these ills, makes a suggestion which I think is worthy of some consideration; and I shall be happy if, through your means, it meet the eyes of the authorities at the India Office.

"Let some more stringent police action be initiated," he virtually says—"let men be stationed in small boats at intervals along the line of bathers, furnished with ropes, swimming belts, &c.; let police stations be placed along the banks—in short, interfere actively." And the expense of this, it may be asked, who is to pay for it? "Tax each pilgrim, each bather," is the reply—a tax of four annas or sixpence a head would be readily levied and cheerfully paid, and a very large and important revenue would accrue to Government thereby. Although the income-tax is detested in India, my informant opines that no such ill-feeling would be excited by the impost in question.

It may be remarked indeed, that hardly one individual of the many millions who annually assemble on the banks of the Ganges to perform the rites customary at the eclipse of the moon comes empty handed, and the great majority of pilgrims give a large portion of their substance, as a preliminary necessity, to the Poojans and other Brahmanical priests, who, as it were, preside over them; all therefore must have money. Nor should it be forgotten that though my correspondent's suggestion may be a good one, it is not original. Yet this makes it, I think, only the more valuable. The Mahommedan rulers of India inflicted a tax and derived a revenue in the very way he indicates.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, CENTURION.

Notices of Books.

The Story of Gautama Buddha and his Creed. An Epic, by Richard Phillips. Longmans and Co. 1871.

In thirteen cantos of rhymed heroic verse, cut up into stanzas of eight lines each, Mr. Phillips has wrought out a careful study of the life and teachings of Sákya Múni, or Gautama Bhudda, the semi-mythical founder of a "religion which, after more than 2,000 years, is still professed by 455,000,000 of human beings." If it was a bold conception to spin an epic out of the mass of bewildering legends which no Eastern scholar has hitherto digested into a full biography, Mr. Phillips may claim at least the merit of producing a volume of flowing, clear, and very readable verse, in which we are presented with a comprehensive and fairly truthlike picture of a very remarkable man. Whether his reading of Buddha's mental growth and religious philosophy be altogether or essentially correct, we may leave the disputants as to the true meaning of "Nirvân" to settle between them. It is enough for us if the author has thrown the results of his own ponderings into an artistic and pleasing shape. From this point of view we may commend the book alike to those who know something of the Buddhistic legends, and to those who have any leisure or desire to learn something about them. In its pure diction and quiet, but varied flow Mr. Phillips's verse recalls that of Mr. Morris, himself an artist moulded in the school of Chaucer and Keats. A single specimen, taken almost at random from the fifth canto, will show what we mean:—

He would sit often raising not his eye
To see who gazed at him or passed him by,
While his free thought went out beyond the bars
Of time and sense, and soared among the stars,
Or dived into the hidden deeps below,
Or went like lightning, flashing to and fro,
Or peered into the blank of death, or strained
To grasp the Unknown and the Unattained.

In vain he sought the starting point and goal—
The whence and whither of the human soul:
In vain he strove to pierce the clouded night
Where God is hidden; for tho' He be light,
In thickest clouds He wraps Himself about,
And man by searching cannot find him out.
The journeying stars were silent overhead,
And silent still lay the unconscious dead.

But not alone in sitting thus apart,
And parleying with his own mind and heart,
Did he seek truth; where raged the war of words,
And arguments flew out like deathful swords,
He hung not back; but oftentimes would rush
Into the thickest of the fight and push Men on to strife, regardless of all scath,

Recreations of an Indian Official. By Lieut. Colonel G. B. Malleson. Longmans and Co. 1872.

The author of the Red Pamphlet and the "French in India" has here put together a series of biographical essays, all but one of which have already appeared in print. The longest paper, that on Lord Lawrence, will not be new to readers of "Blackwood," but its own merits and the interest always attaching to the subject of it fully justify its reproduction. Few records of a successful career offer so healthy a stimulant to the enquiring reader as does that of the only Bengal Civilian, except Hastings, who ever rose to be an actual Governor-General of India. Colonel Malleson's biography of the "Saviour of India" might make of itself a separate volume, both for its length and fulness of treatment. It not only gives us every important detail bearing on his Lordship's memorable career, from the day when young Lawrence agreed to enter Haileybury instead of going out to India as a military cadet down to the last hours of his Viceroyalty; but in the third part of the memoir it deals at sufficient length with all the moot points of his Viceregal career. In Colonel Malleson his Lordship has found a warm but discerning eulogist; and no one who reads the chapter appropriately called "The Trial" will fail to estimate aright the immense debt our country owes to the man who dared stake the last remnants of English power in the Punjab on the one supreme object of retaking Delhi in good time. After all we have heard whispered against Lord Lawrence, the fact remains that but for his unwearied efforts and urgent counsels the whole Punjab was on the point of rising against us, when Nicholson's arrival before Delhi assured the swift doom of the rebel stronghold. Full of interest also is the sketch of Akbar, the Moghul Alfred; and the story of Madhajee Sindia, founder of the house that now rules in Gwalior, carries us back to some of the most romantic scenes and critical events in later Indian history. Had Madhajee lived but ten years longer, our fight for empire in India would no doubt have proved much harder than it did. In reading the author's excellent memoir of Sir Vincent Eyre, we are reminded of the very important part which one of the heroes of the Afghan War played, as a major of artillery, in crushing rebellion in Bahar during that year of trial, 1857. But for Eyre's masterly boldness at the right moment Arrah would have fallen, the relief of Lucknow been sorely endangered, and Bengal itself given up to revolt. Another hero of that eventful time has been worthily commemorated in Colonel Malleson's biography of Sir Bartle Frere. These "Recreations of an Indian Official" should afford some hours of pleasant reading to all who care for well-written episodes in the wonderful story of English rule over India.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

"KEEPING UP THE CREDIT OF A REGIMENT."

The Madras Athenæum remarks that there is one way still remaining in which the visits of great men prove to be inflictions, as the class which suffers from them is almost as helpless to protect its own interests as the poor coolies were in the brave days of old. The sufferers will not even grumble as the coolies did. Like that bore of a Spartan boy who was always having a fox gnawing at his stomach they are too proud to complain; they grin and bear it, they even reject sympathy when offered, but among themselves, have we not just heard them swear! We hope we shall not lay ourselves open to an action for libel under explanation 2 of 499 XXI. Penal Code by thus letting the cat out of the bag concerning the subalterns of British regiments, for they constitute the class of victims to which we refer. At any rate we can plead the first exception in our own behalf, for we do but publish the imputation for the public good. Have we not often heard "Here is that (adjective or past participle) Big Wig coming to the station, and of course the Colonel will make us give him a dinner (or ball or as the case may be); infernal shame! The (expletive) old (substantive) takes all the credit and gets all the returns, and he ought to pay for it; he can afford it and we cannot," shooting of discourse ad libitum and growls about duns and every sort of out-at-elbows misery. And such victimisations sometimes come thick and threefold and the results are. . . Does anybody really need to be told what the results in many cases must be? It has come to be a conventional notion, Lord knows how, that regiments must entertain, and also that they must do it in style, Lord knows why, and so Ensign Jones, son of a poor parson, and Ensign Smith, son of a half-pay officer, and Ensign Robinson, son of a bank clerk, are taxed to furnish plate and other ostentations that would do credit to noblemen, and viands and liquors fit for a Lord Mayor's feast. It is in vain that her Majesty's regulations strive hard to protect the youngsters from such victimisation. Conventionalism is stronger than Queen's regulations and insists upon the sacrifice. And yet it is grossly inconsistent in conventionalism to demand performances so absurdly out of proportion to the humble wages which subalterns receive. Of course we know that the notion originated in the fact of there being many men with ample private means serving as regimental officers, and so indeed the notion would not have been a bad one, provided those men of ample private means bore all the disproportionate cost; we have known instances in which they did so. But it does not alter the injustice of taxing poor A because rich B can afford it, and under Mr. Cardwell's new system the Army will ere long be all poor A's. When such is the case they will be able to take care of themselves; but now, during the transition state, we want some help to save the poor as from being fleeced, from being forced wilfully into debt, sometimes into discreditable courses, often into ruin. We should like to persuade conventionalism that the "keeping up the credit of the regiment," which in this connection means the personal vanity of the C. O., does not justify picking subalterns' pockets; that the maxim that it is right to be just before being generous is specially applicable when it is other people's money you are dealing with; that social enjoyment is no way dependent on extravagance or ostentation; and that neither ostentation nor even enjoyment is worth purchasing at the risk of serious injury to others.

INDIAN ARMY PENSIONS.

The Madras Times holds that the position of officers pensioned has been growing worse and worse for many years past, until it has practically come to this, that the word pension sounds as an absurdity in the ears of all officers between twenty and thirty years' service. They cannot afford to accept the inadequate pensions offered; consequently, and to the serious embarrassment of the State which has provided no outlet for senility, they hang on to India in the desperate hope of some day obtaining Colonel's allowances and the highest prize of their profession. The great majority of these old officers are married men, commonly with large families to boot. To ask them to retire upon pensions of two or three hundred a-year when they may draw three or four times the amount of such annuities by remaining in the country is an absurdity too palpable to need further explanation. Its results are self-evident in the vast number of unemployed officers, and officers unsuitably employed, now cumbering the lists of the Staff Corps and Indian Army. It has from time to time been proposed to restore the old bonus system by which retirement was facilitated and promotion quickened; but the abolition of purchase in the British Army, has completely put this idea out of the question. If any inducement to retirement is contemplated, it must assume the form of increased pension to render it effective, and on the whole we cannot see that the Indian officers are demanding aught but strict justice in asking that the money value of their pensions in 1871 should be assimilated to those of nearly a century ago. There is no question, we understand, about the desirableness of opening a channel for retirement. The officers themselves crave it, and the government in India has many times vainly expressed similar ideas on the subject to the Government in London. The Secretary of State and his Council are to be credited with the obstinacy which stops the way, but why the obstinacy should exist is an enigma to every one. The existent policy of compelling officers entitled to pension to remain in India, whether they will or no, can only be considered one of a stupid and senseless nature. No economy is gained by it, for it would be cheaper to pay an unemployed officer or one employed unsuitably for his rank £500 a-year in England than £1,000 or upwards out here; nor can we believe that it in any way tends to promote the general efficiency of the army, since it must evidently create much discontent among men upon whom the proper discipline of the army mainly depends. These officers observe with such feelings as they may ameliorations made to suit the times in the Covenanted and Uncovenanted Civil Services; the Indian Military service alone is left out in the cold, nor is even a reason compassionately assigned why it should be treated with more indifference than any other. And in another phase of the question this poverty of pension acts, we should say, most injuriously on the service. Married officers of the Indian army, and their name is legion, knowing that the pensions they may at any time be obliged to accept through illness, &c., are utterly inadequate to support their position as officers and gentlemen in society at home, must of necessity save what little they can from their Indian pay and allowances to meet the evil day; whereby furlough is put out of the question for most of them, and opportunities of rubbing off the rust of Indian life in the great world denied where much needed.

THE CONDUCT OF THE LOSHAI CAMPAIGN.

The Englishman is not among those who would maintain that if a woman have done that, for doing which a man would deserve death, she should be spared on account of her sex. But it does hold that no necessity short of self-preservation, if even that, can justify a civilised people in deliberately destroying innocent women or children, not only innocent but incapable of wrong. To take the worst view of the crime of the Loshais, they have plundered and taken the lives of women and children, as well as of men, wrongly. Does the fact that an ignorant and savage people have done this justify us in doing the same? Would even the fact that civilised people like ourselves had done it justify us in perpetrating similar atrocities? We are told that the Government had deliberately considered all this before they sanctioned the expedition. We are sorry to hear it; for if they knew that no offensive measures were likely to be effectual but the deliberate destruction of non-combatant and unoffending women and children, they should have finally decided upon that defensive policy which they so long hesitated to abandon, and the worst objections to which were costliness and inconvenience. The case of a besieged city in European warfare is wholly irrelevant. The granaries destroyed by our expeditionary force were not in besieged cities, but in abandoned villages. It is certainly not within the code of European military ethics to destroy all the food found in a country marched through, whether private or public property, whether intended to sustain and prolong the defence of combatants or not, and the least humane of European Powers would hesitate to destroy grain under any circumstances, where it was morally certain that a mixed population would in consequence have to starve even after submission. Were the Loshais so situated that the grain destroyed could be replaced by them on the conclusion of peace, and that its destruction merely meant the loss of so much property, the case would be very different. It might then be quite justifiable to destroy it to induce submission, for the Loshais would themselves be responsible for any distress that might take place up to the time of their submission. But this is not the case. The Loshais have not the means of importing food; and the course that is being pursued, if carried beyond a certain point, must seal their fate, whether they submit or not, unless, as we said before, the Government is going to supply them with food. If the latter course is contemplated, it might probably have been found less expensive to arrange for the protection of the grain, which was after all merely a question of expense, than it will be to purchase and carry to the spot a year's food for its owners.

The Friend of India remarks that we have sent out a well-equipped expedition, and we are asked that the men shall show themselves to the enemy and then come back without having effected anything. We are satisfied that the Government will not send any such absurd order to the officers engaged in the expedition, and we hope that Englishmen will rate at what it is worth that humanitarian—not humane—cry which would paralyse the troops at the very moment when the orders of the Government and the wishes of the people here are being literally carried out. Better that we should afterwards send a hundred thousand pounds' worth of food to the frontier and distribute it to the vanquished than that we should now hesitate to destroy the stores. There will be suffering, we are aware; if there was not it would not be war, and if it was carried out in a mere spirit of retaliation it would be open to reprobation. But it is not carried out in any such spirit. The officers of the expedition, like the troops of the expedition, have no grudge to satisfy, no affront or disaster to avenge. They can hardly be expected, either, to care much for the Cachar planters. They are simply sent out to do a certain thing, and they are doing it in the only way in which it can be done. The Government may safely trust to the common sense of the country that this fact will be clearly seen and recognised. The cry is the same old thing that has assailed every soldier in modern times. Let it be disregarded, so long as the duty is being carried out without vindictiveness. Any spirit of that kind would deserve reprobation; any refusal to grant quarter in one single case where it is sought for would be murder; but the destruction of stores, in dealing with a savage people who run from their villages, is an absolute necessity of the position, and to leave the stores undestroyed would be an astounding folly, and would make of our expedition a laughing stock for the world. We should like to see the critics of the officers placed in the same position that those officers occupy. To stand still were ruin; to overtake the tribes is impossible if they choose to run; to destroy their stores is to elicit an outburst of the silliest sentiment that ever came from tongue or pen.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

LEFT COLUMN, CAMP TIPAI MOOKH, Dec. 26.—Since my last letter events have been progressing rapidly, and the news from the front has become somewhat more interesting than the dry record of road-making and commissariat arrangements, which has formed the staple topic of conversation since the commencement of the expedition. The day before yesterday we had reports of heavy firing having been heard for some hours up the river, but we only got the details last night. In my last letter I mentioned that a point had been reached from which the village of Kholell could be discerned. The next day, 22nd, the position was reconnoitred, and the road found to run down the ridge of the hill towards the junction of the Towee Boom and the Tipai, distant about six miles from the general's camp. From this point a steep ridge rises up from the river, on the top of which is perched Kholell, overhanging the confluence of the streams. Nothing certain had been ascertained regarding the temper and intentions of the Kholell men, and the civil officers were anxious to conciliate them so as to secure their services as guides; orders were in consequence given to the regiments not to fire unless attacked. The road down to the river lay through the same sort of country which I have described in my previous letters—dense forest and bamboo jungle. When the force, consisting of detachments of the 22nd and 44th, had got some way down, intelligence was received that the Loshais were assembling in large numbers below. As the head of the column debouched on the river, they came suddenly on a large stone dam built across the stream, flanked by a watercourse and picket house, and occupied by a party of about forty Loshais, who, without waiting to fire a shot, raised a fearful yell and bolted, followed closely by sepoy, who, in obedience to orders, refrained from pulling a trigger on them. The chase was continued for about half a mile, during which the Tipai was crossed three times in water waist deep; and, on turning a corner, the savages were found all drawn up on a sand-bank, and amongst them a muntiri of Impanu, by name Mora. I may as well explain for the benefit of your up-country readers that muntiris are, under the chiefs, the head men amongst the Loshais, and are employed as envoys and plenipotentiaries by the Loshai potentates. The above-named dignitary is well known in Cachar, and had just returned from a diplomatic errand to the general's camp, where he had smoked the calumet and drunk the rum of peace with the civil officer. On seeing him, a palaver ensued, the Tipai separating the parties. The Loshais were informed that there was no intention on our part to harm them if they promised to be good little savages and not to do any mischief, and that much fire-water would be bestowed on them in the event of so desirable a consummation; but if they proved naughty and fired guns at us, then unpleasant consequences for themselves would inevitably ensue. What result the negotiations would have led to no one knows, for when our men commenced wading across the river towards them, they all ran off and disappeared in the forest, and with them Mora—so much confidence did these simple children of nature repose in our promises! That night the force encamped in the Tipai river beneath the Kholell ~~boom~~ or clearances. The next morning, the 23rd, the force started in light marching order. A steep ascent of 3,000 feet brought them right up into the jhooms; and as the advanced guard emerged from the forest into the open space cleared for cultivation, they were received with a volley which shot down Colonel Robertson's police orderly at his side. First blood for the Loshais. The party of the enemy consisted of about thirty men ensconced behind a jhoom house, who, after delivering their fire, ran off into the jungle, leaving a trail of blood behind them, which the force followed up. The tactics of these people are simple enough. To lie in wait in the jungle with their muskets laid on a rest, covering a spot which must be passed in single file,—to fire one or two shots before they are discovered, and then dive down the hillside through creepers and bamboos impenetrable to the heavily-laden soldier, seem to be their sole idea of warfare. As for standing up before our men, they never attempt it. After this little encounter, the men swarmed up the jhooms as fast as possible, burning all the granaries, there being no means of removing the grain. One man of the 22nd was shot through both thighs. At 11 A.M. the first village was reached. The enemy had evidently only just cleared out before the 22nd came in. The village was fired, and the force moved on; by noon village No. 2 was reached, but escaped the fate of No. 1, as it seemed to offer a good site for the camp. A halt was called, and a space cleared for the wounded, who were left here under a guard; orders being sent back to the camp to move up. After a slight pause the force again moved on, and a tremendous burst up-hill of 1,000 feet brought them to the chief village, which the 44th took at a rush, two of the Gurkhas being shot dead. The village was burnt to the ground; all these villages were full of corn and live-stock, pigs, fowls, pigeons, &c. All this immovable property was destroyed, and the greatest possible amount of mischief done, after which the force returned to village No. 2, well satisfied with their day's work, thoroughly tired, but they were doomed not to get any rest that night, for the enemy kept creeping up the hill to get a shot at the camp, and the sentries were not slow in replying. Only one casualty resulted from this desultory firing, one coolie being wounded. The next day, Sunday, the neighbourhood of the village and the front of the picquets was cleared of jungle, so that the Loshais will find the amusement of taking pot-shots all night, rather a hazardous one to indulge in. After making all ship-shape the General, who does not seem to know what fatigue means, started on the pleasant Sabbath amusement of village and granary-burning. He had with him Colonel Nuthall and Captain Robertson of the 44th, with 60 Gurkhas; the 22nd, under Major Stafford, being meanwhile sent back to the former camp on the Tipai to keep open the road and escort baggage and provisions. After trudging along for a mile, fresh jhooms were reached, the advance was fired into, but no damage was done, and the village was taken at a rush by Robertson, who had rather a narrow escape, his scabbard being struck by a bullet. The village with all its granaries was soon in a blaze, and the party returned to camp. They were left unmolested that night, as the Loshais apparently had had enough of it. Our total loss in the two days amounted to killed, two sepoy of the 44th; wounded, four sepoy of the 22nd, one constable severely, and one coolie. The enemy's loss could not be ascertained, as they succeeded in carrying off their wounded, owing to the denseness of the jungle; the blood tracks, however, show that it must have been considerable. The general impression in camp seems to be that the Loshais will never make a regular fight, as with every advantage of position and knowledge of the ground they ought to have made a much better stand at each village. This fight with the Kholell men will certainly complicate matters in a political point of view, as we calculated on having their assistance to communicate with the other tribes. There seems to be little doubt but that all the Loshai tribes have agreed to sink their mutual differences, and are making cause commune against the invaders, in which case they will array vast numbers of men against us; but if they are of no better stamp than the braves of Kholell, they ought easily to be disposed of. It is rather early in the day, however, to come to any conclusion about their future behaviour, and we do not yet know what they will do behind stockades. The Artillery are still at Tipai Mookh, greatly to their disgust. Up to the present, guns do not appear to have been required, but no one can tell what is before us, and if Sookpilall turns round and takes the field, they may yet have a chance of putting in a word. A declaration of war by Sookpilall would be most opportune at this moment, as a silver claret jug and cup (what an appropriate present for a naked savage!) are now on their way up. On the jug is a complimentary inscription testifying to his unswerving fidelity and the esteem in which he is held by the British Government, and although this somewhat detracts from the selling value of the article, still it can be disposed of as old silver and a saving effected, which is not to be despised in these economical times.—Pioneer Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

CAMP, DELHI, New Year's Day.—We are gradually getting into form. As much instruction and real work have been crammed into the last fortnight as are attempted in many winter seasons of the ordinary run of divisional and brigade field days, and we certainly can work together in very different form to that in which we started, and no doubt shall be much straighter when we leave off altogether than we are now. The ablest theorist is non-plussed when made to work out his problems with real men and things to legislate for. It is said that the great strategist, Colonel C. Chesney, Royal Engineers, who on paper can prove most succinctly that Wellington lost Waterloo, and is constantly in print as author of the most able papers on the art of war, cannot, and never could, command a couple of companies of Sappers in the field. W. E. Grace could not make his wonderful scores at cricket without practice, so while there is no obliging foe to give us a chance of practising the real thing, these camps are invaluable, if only to make men think a bit for themselves. No man with any self-respect can bear feeling he is looked on by his juniors as "a duffer" for having been found wanting when called upon at a critical moment. Questions of the kind are tabooed as much as possible at messes, but the field-officer who, through not taking the ordinary precautions and making the necessary dispositions of the portion of the force under his command, is ignominiously worsted, must feel small. All who mean business ought to feel thankful that they have the chance of picking up useful "wrinkles," as no amount of study without experience can pull a man through. Generals of divisions have not been able to restrain their ardour any longer, and divisional field-days are gradually taking the place of brigade parades. As might have been anticipated, the claim to victory between contending forces is ever a subject of argument—the attacking party making it out quite clearly that they turned the flank, drew the enemy out of his stronghold, and then rolled him up; and the defenders proving equally satisfactorily that not one of the attacking lot is alive! that they are blown off the face of the earth, having exposed themselves to a fire that must have swept them away! The Umpire Rules, a copy of which is enclosed, in case they may not have been published, are excellent, but it ought to be laid down clearly how many rounds a battery must fire into an advancing line (not column) before the attack reaches the guns for the latter to have annihilated the former. The keenest Cavalry soldier will hardly uphold the idea that his regiment in column can sustain six rounds of Artillery at decent range before they are over the guns, without being knocked into little bits. It is a very different thing if Cavalry can manage to conceal themselves, so that they pounce on a battery before it can discharge more than a round from each gun. Umpires are especially selected men, as a rule, but it is hard to be altogether without bias, and the Artillery Umpire naturally has a leaning towards his peculiar arm, and believes in it, and vice versa. From what we have seen, however, it is plain that few have appreciated what guns and rifles can do now-a-days. Squadrons, companies, and batteries, that complacently post themselves on eminences, a lovely cock-shot for the enterprising gunner, would very soon slip behind the dip of the hill if there was something in front of the blank cartridge. Of course in these cases a little lead, and the pretty projectiles now in use, would get everybody into their places quicker than any amount of instruction and explanation possibly can. When a man is told that practice can be made at 2,500 yards, he cannot possibly realise the great fact till he gets on a vast plain, and is shown an object a mile and a-half off! When he has quite taken that in he will be more wary next time he is directed to "draw out" the force supposed to be occupying such a village. Prisoners are made indiscriminately. If a man cannot account for himself, and the "examining party" is not satisfied whether he is friendly, or come out to spy the nakedness of the land, the individual is detained—a trooper lays hold of his bridle, and his life is not worth a moment's purchase if he tries to escape. An A. D. C. and a near relative of the "highest personage in the land" of Lud were collared and obliged to submit! A field officer from Cork, having fought till he was overpowered, and at last obliged to succumb and surrender himself to a subaltern, made a harrowing appeal to his followers in the following language—"Well, now, ye spalpeens, d'ye see the plighth yer commandher is in, bad scan to ye!" A new sorting and disposition of the forces is arranged. General McMurdo, with his division and Fraser's cavalry brigade, is to hold a line of country from Badlee (about four miles on the Kurnaul road) to Yeroda, a village on the Jumna, three miles from the Delhi Ridge, against the remainder of the forces under General Francis, who attacks from Allipore. The arrangements at present are of the sketchiest, but everything will settle down very soon. The country is so much under cultivation that manœuvring in front of an enemy, and at the same time having a regard for the interest of the ryot, is by no means an easy matter. The cultivation is looked on as "deep water," according to orders; so that from a distance troops, which appear to be twiddling about in the most unaccountable manner, are, on inquiry, merely doing their best to circumnavigate imaginary lakes! The commander-in-chief, who, as you know, is an old engineer, takes great interest in the noble corps of Sappers and Miners, and to-day was present at their first pontooning experiment. They pontooned the Jumna in an hour and a quarter. The width of the river at the point selected was only 332 feet, and the difference of current to that of the Ganges Canal at Roorkee, where they have had their only practice, put them out a bit, but they hope in a few days to do what they did to-day in a quarter of an hour! Army signalling is also being worked properly. It is by no means bad practice, by laying an insulated wire from the head-quarters camp to Hindoo Rao's house on the top of the ridge, to send a message from thence almost simultaneously round the three divisions. If commanding situations can be obtained, it is wonderful, in clear weather, what can be done by the British soldier waving a flag at the end of a bamboo! At the hill station of Murree, in the Punjab, messages were sent over thirty-five miles, with two intermediate stations, almost as quickly as it would take to telegraph direct! Surveying is still going on as we break new ground; fortunately we have got plenty of really good men for the work. Colonel Baigre, so well known and so popular in your part in India, is always "retained for the defence," and sent to sketch the country most likely to be worked over. At present he is away in a bell tent near the Jumna, beyond Berarce, about seven miles from the head quarters camp. Major Hogg, Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master General, Bombay Army, is sharing his spacious dwelling. This is not the first survey these two knights of the plane table have worked together.

Miscellaneous.

THE LATE EXPLOSION.—The subscription for the families of the two non-commissioned officers who perished by the explosion in the Agra Fort, amounts, we are glad to learn, to a "goodly sum."

CIVIL.—We hear that Mr. T. J. Alexander, Officiating Superintendent of stamps and Stationery, Calcutta, has been appointed Collector of Malda, and that Mr. J. B. Roberts has already charge of the above office.

COLONEL KEATINGE.—The Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces, is due at Jubbulpore on the 22nd, Mandla on the 28th of January, Burha on the 16th of February, Bhandara on the 21st, and Nagpore on the 22nd.

THE BENARES RAJ.—Bulwan Singh, the son of Rajah Cheyt Singh, died at Agra on the 22nd Dec. His son, Chukerbatty Singh, died five days before him. The sole direct male representative of the ex-Rajahs of Benares is now a lad of tender years, the great grandson of Hastings's enemy.

CANALS.—Correspondence has been published relative to the failure of the canal water-supply in the Umritsar and Lahore divisions in July last, and the alleged injustice committed upon the cultivators by the canal authorities. The replies of the canal officers seem however to be satisfactory, and the complaint has been dismissed.—Pioneer.

A NEW GRIEVANCE.—A native paper has found out a grievance of a rather novel kind. It says that prisoners are not allowed opium, tobacco, and other intoxicating drugs when in jail. The deprivation of these drugs to a person used to their consumption often causes death, and therefore, urges our contemporary, the Government, by depriving the people of the drugs, is responsible for their death.

STATE RAILWAYS.—A contemporary informs us that on the railway to be constructed from Agra to the Sambhur Lake, the Viceroy has ordered, as a mark of honour to the Maharajahs of Seypore and Bhurtpore, special accommodation to be provided for the Maharajahs at those stations, or, if they prefer it, that they should be allowed to erect a small bungalow for themselves at their own expense.

HIGH COURT, N.W.P.—Indian Public Opinion understands that the subject of the Chief Justiceship of the High Court of the North-Western Provinces is likely to be brought in a very prominent manner before the House of Commons, when Parliament re-assembles, and that the grounds of the recent extraordinary appointment are to be sifted in the most searching manner.

A SAD ACCIDENT.—A sergeant of H.M.'s 1-11th Regiment met his death quite accidentally the day after Christmas-day at Morar. The previous day two sergeants put on boxing gloves and were having a little amusement; in receiving a blow on the face from his opponent the sergeant fell flat on his back and his head coming in contact with the flagged floor caused concussion of the brain.

GRANT TO THE FOREST DEPARTMENT.—We hear that provisional sanction has been accorded by the Government of India to an additional grant of Rs. 60,000 for the current year, and Rs. 90,000 for 1872-73, to enable the Forest Department of the Central Provinces to undertake the necessary operations for supplying teak sleepers for the Warda and East Berar Railway from the Ahiri forests in those provinces, which are said to have been purchased by Government.—Indian Daily News, Dec. 29.

JUBBULPORE LINE.—Earnings for the week ending 16th December, 1871, £2,762 15s. 7d.; corresponding week last year, £2,134 5s. 2d.; increase, £628 10s. 5d.; from 1st July, 1871, to 16th December, 1871, £53,142 13s. 10d.; from 1st July, 1870, to 17th December, 1870, £41,943 11s. 4d.; increase, £11,199 2s. 6d. Miles open for the week ending 16th December, 1871, 223; corresponding week last year, 223. Per mile open for the week ending 16th December, 1871, £12 7s. 9d.; corresponding week last year, £9 11s. 5d.; increase, £2 16s. 4d.—Daily Examiner.

DEATH UNDER SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES.—On Friday last, the police received information that Mr. Henry Francis had gone over to Howrah with Mr. Paterson, a hotel-keeper of that station, and had not returned home. Enquiries were made at the hotel, and it was ascertained that Francis had left about twelve o'clock on Friday night in company with another person, whose name was not known. Last Sunday morning the body of Francis was found floating close to the Railway Jetty, and there were marks of violence on the body. The deceased was in liquor when he left the hotel, and it is believed that he had a fight with some boatmen on the ghaut.—Englishman, Jan. 5.

LITERARY.—Mr. Buckland, the Commissioner of Bardwan, has discovered, in the Collectorate of Birbhum, some records of an earlier date than those mentioned by Dr. Hunter in his annals of Rural Bengal.

STREET TRAMWAYS.—Mr. Gore, C.E., who visits India as the engineer and agent of several influential and wealthy capitalists, who are seeking to obtain permission to lay down tramways in the streets of the presidential towns, has had an interview with the Governor-General, for the purpose of explaining to His Excellency the plans and models of street railways as now being constructed in London, Brussels, Madrid, and other European cities.

CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUND.—With reference to a communication from the Secretary of this Fund, reporting the admission of Mr. Andrew Ross to an annuity of £1,000, or Rs. 10,666 10 8, the Government of India have observed that as the Civil Service Annuity Fund has now been abolished, and as the managers have no longer power to admit annuities, it is necessary that the application of Mr. Ross for admission to an annuity, and similar applications, which may in future be received, shall be forwarded to the Government of India, in the Home Department, for disposal.

A LITERARY BEGUM.—The Begum of Bhopal has appeared in public as an authoress, having, a native paper informs us, lately published in a local newspaper an essay on female education, "as remarkable for caligraphy as for the enlightened sentiments it contains." The same authority also enlightens us as to how the Begum passes her time. From morning till 11 30 A.M. she studies Persian and English, then enjoys her dinner and a siesta for two hours, and passes the rest of the day in hearing and deciding suits. The evening is devoted to needlework and embroidery, in which Her Highness is very expert.

THE CALCUTTA JUTE TRADE.—Apart from the constant occurrence of fires in jute godowns, one of the great nuisances in Calcutta at the present day is the constant blocking up of our streets by cart-loads of jute, the trade in which commodity seems to have of late developed to an unprecedented extent. When the jute godowns are ordered to be removed to the suburbs, it will, no doubt, be a great relief at least to the carriage-driving population of Calcutta to find themselves freed from this nuisance. We hear that some of the jute owners are about to memorialise the Government of Bengal against the removal of the godowns. But it is the interest of the people of the city, other than jute owners to see that the jute godowns are ordered to be turned out of Calcutta as quick as possible.—Indian Mirror.

THE HON. MR. KENNEDY.—The appointment of Mr. John Pitt-Kennedy to the vacant judgeship in the High Court, caused by the death of the late Hon. Mr. Norman, must be received by all classes of the community with satisfaction. Mr. Kennedy is not only an experienced and able barrister, but he has been always known to be one of the most generous-hearted and popular men in Calcutta. His knowledge of the law is most extensive, and as a consulting counsel his advice has been always eagerly sought after and greatly valued. Both among the European and the native community he has been always deservedly held in high esteem, as much for the qualities of his head as of his heart. We have every reason to believe that Mr. Kennedy will dignify the Bench, and prove equal the expectations formed of him.—Indian Mirror.

JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT MAGISTRATES.—We (Indian Daily News) hear that the Bill for extending the powers of District Magistrates is now in course of preparation. The amount of fine which a magistrate is empowered to impose is to be increased from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000. Under the provisions of the said Bill, the period of imprisonment to which a district magistrate is empowered to sentence a man, is also to be augmented from two to four years, with an addition of one year in default of the payment of a fine. Amongst the several reasons given by the mover of the aforesaid Bill for introducing it into the Council, the following is one in the form of a query:—"Suppose a gentleman, or a lady en route to England, has been robbed by an old offender, is he or she to lose their passage home, and be detained until the sessions trial is held?"

THE LATE ARCHDEACON PRATT.—India has this week lost a most excellent and useful man in Archdeacon Pratt, who died of choleraic diarrhoea on Thursday night at Ghazepore. He left Calcutta on Christmas-eve, on his visitation tour, and in all probability had been chilled in the now cold night air; the fatal result was swift—a very few hours elapsing from the beginning of the sickness to the end of all. The Church of England has lost in the Ven. Archdeacon a fine, stern, and entirely loyal man; a student in the old sober plodding sense, which aimed at work and eschewed noise and display. His death is one of those hard things of which India knows so much. He had very nearly finished his Indian career, extending, we believe, over thirty years, and he intended next year to return home, to finish up the chapter where it began. The Almighty fiat was different, and the Archdeacon fell in the path of duty—at the true post of honour. We very recently reviewed his work on "Scripture and Science not at Variance," and did not review it altogether in agreement. Let us add now that it is the work of a noble and truth-loving man to combat what he deems error, and that it will be read for many a year to come for light and guidance on the Oracles of the Most High.—Friend of India.

MESSRS. HOGG AND ROBERTS.—Mr. Stuart Hogg has applied for twenty months' leave of absence to England. The Pioneer thinks that the appointment of Mr. J. B. Roberts to officiate as Chairman of the Justices would be received, there can be no doubt, with general satisfaction by the inhabitants of Calcutta; and that the reply of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to the signatories of the Roberts memorial would appear to point to such a conclusion.

BABU SHAMA CHARAN DEY.—The Englishman has the following paragraph:—"It is, we understand, very doubtful whether, after all, Babu Shama Charan Dey will proceed to England to be examined by the Parliamentary Committee, the ostensible reason being the opinion of his medical advisers that at his advanced period of life the journey would be attended with great danger to his health. This is, we think, to be regretted by the public, if not by the Financial Department, as the Babu would probably be able to give information which is unlikely to be elicited from the European heads of the department."

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY TRAFFIC.—Earnings for the week ending 16th December, 1871, £58,961. 9s. 10d.; corresponding week last year, £50,430. 6s.; increase, £8,531. 3s. 10d.; from 1st July, 1871, to 16th December, 1871, £922,990. 1s.; from 1st July, 1870, to 17th December, 1870, £1,066,961. 12s. 3d.; decrease, £152,502. 15s. 1d. Miles open for the week ending 16th December, 1871, 1,280; corresponding week last year, 1,311; increase, 14½. Per mile open for the week ending the 16th December, 1871, £46. 1s. 3d.; corresponding week last year, £44. 11s. 5d.; increase, £1 9s. 10d.—Daily Examiner.

LAND REVENUE.—Circular instructions, we (Indian Daily News) hear, have been issued to the several local Governments to furnish to the Supreme Government a return in the prescribed form, showing for each district the amount of the existing annual demand of land revenue, the estimated amount to which it will be probably raised on the next revision of assessments in all cases in which the term of the existing assessments or settlements will expire within the next six years, and the increment of demand which may be expected to accrue, in each of the years from 1872-73 to 1877-78, from revised settlements which are now in progress, or which are likely to be introduced within the above mentioned period.

BERHAMPORE HOSPITAL TO BE A LUNATIC ASYLUM.—The Government of India has sanctioned the conversion of the British Infantry Hospital at Berhampore, which is not at present required for military purposes, into a lunatic asylum, subject to the condition that the building may be reclaimed by the military department in the event of Berhampore being again unexpectedly occupied, as in the year 1857, by British troops. There are half-a-dozen Berhampores in Bengal. This one is the scene of the first outbreak in 1857, and, as some of our readers may not know, is seven miles from Moorshedabad.—Indian Daily News, Dec. 30.

MILITARY.—The 2nd Regiment Punjab Infantry was to leave Kohat for Dera Gaze Khan on the 26th ult., and was expected to arrive at the latter station about the 20th January.—Major General Huyshe, Inspector General of Royal Artillery for India, with his Brigade Major, Captain Minto Elliot, were expected to arrive at the Camp of Exercise, Delhi, on Saturday, Dec. 30, from Jubbulpore. Since the 20th of October General Huyshe has inspected at Cawnpore, Benares, Dinapore, Barrackpore, Fort William, Rangoon, and Thayetmyo. When the Camp breaks up General Huyshe intends inspecting every battery of Royal Artillery in the Punjab, in addition to those stationed at Meerut.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Jan. 5.—We have to report a rather better feeling in the market during the past few days. In some instances rather firmer rates have been established, but the larger proportion of the business transacted has been on same terms as those current last mail.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Jan. 5.—Jute: There has been a fair amount of business done during the week at a slight rise for the best descriptions. Saltpetre: Sellers stand out for extreme rates, and but little business has been transacted. Rice has continued in good demand for Australia, and a rise may be expected in fine sorts as the crop is only an average one, and the quality not first-rate. Linseed has continued firm, and in some contracts a rise of one anna was conceded. Raw Silk: The November bund will prove a comparative failure, and prices are expected to rise, but at present there is no business doing except in inferior sorts; 100 maunds rainy bund Commercilly are reported to have changed hands at from Rs. 11-8 to 12-4.

THE ECLIPSE AT POODOCOTTAH.

The following appears in a letter from Mr. L. Respighi to the Editor of Nature:—

"From the 5th to the 11th of December the state of the sky at Poodocottah was somewhat variable, and generally, in the early hours of the day, great masses of mist and cloud predominated in the east, leaving but little hope in favour of our station for observing the eclipse. On the morning of the 12th, indeed, the sky was almost wholly covered with dense masses of mist and cloud, completely obscuring the sun till 7h. 53m., at which time the eclipse had already begun. Soon after this the sun was again covered with thick clouds, but fortunately they began to break a few minutes before totality, when the bright disc of the sun was already sufficiently reduced, and when consequently the time for observation was rapidly approaching.

"To verify the phenomenon of the reversal of the spectral lines at the extreme edge of the sun, I had arranged the plane of dispersion at right angles to the edge at the point of second contact.

"At thirty seconds before totality, the spectral image of the luminous crescent was already sufficiently weakened to allow of its observation by the naked eye without a dark glass; and it was then that the principal dark lines of the solar spectrum came out distinct, and even more strongly marked than before, and curved parallel to the bright edge of the sun; but a few seconds before totality these lines disappeared completely, and the spectrum became continuous, without, however, exhibiting, just before totality, the reversal of the lines, although I was watching most intently for this phenomenon. I would not, however, be understood as denying altogether the reversal of the lines, for it is not impossible that a thin film of mist, or the bright atmospheric light at that time diffused over the spectrum of the solar limb, may have concealed the bright lines.

"At the very instant of totality, the field of the telescope exhibited a most astonishing spectacle. The chromosphere at the edge which was the last to be eclipsed—surmounted for a space of about 50 deg. by two groups of prominences, one on the right the other on the left, of the point of contact—was reproduced in the four spectral lines, C, D, F and G, with extraordinary intensity of light and the most surprising contrast of the brightest colours, so that the four spectral images could be directly compared and their minutest differences easily made out.

"The green zone surrounding the disc of the moon was the brightest, the most uniform, and the best defined. The red zone was also very distinct and well defined, while the blue zone was faint and indistinct. The green zone was well defined at the summit, though less bright than at the base; its form was sensibly circular, and its height about 6 or 7 sec. The red zone exhibited the same form, and approximately the same height as the green, but its light was weaker and less uniform. The height of the green zone was estimated by comparison with the moon's diameter, and from the observed distance of the spectral lines of the prominences.

"These coloured zones shone out upon a faintly illuminated ground, without any marked trace of colour. If the corona contained rays of any other kind, their intensity must have been so feeble that they were merged in the general illumination of the field.

"Soon after the middle of the total eclipse there appeared on the eastern limb, at about 110 deg. from the north point, a fine group of prominences formed of jets rather low but very bright, some rectilinear, others curved round the sun's limb, and exhibiting the intricate deviations and all the characters of prominences in the neighbourhood of solar spots. The brightness and colour of these jets were so vivid as to give them the appearance of fireworks.

"The spaces between some of these jets were perfectly dark, so that the red zone of the corona appeared to be entirely wanting there. Perhaps, however, this was only an effect of contrast due to the extraordinary brightness of the neighbouring jets. I have thought it right to refer to this peculiarity, because the appearance of interstices, or dark spaces, between prominences of considerable brightness, is often observed by means of the spectroscopic, independently of total eclipses.

"The want of an assistant to note the time, and to write down the observations as they were made, occasioned me some loss of time, and the end of the total eclipse was already at hand before I was aware of it.

"The green and red zones were well developed at the western as at the eastern limb, while the blue remained faint and ill-defined. Soon after the appearance of the chromosphere at the western edge there was suddenly projected on the spectrum of the sun's limb, which then appeared beyond that of the moon, a stratum of bright lines, separated by dark spaces, but I could not determine whether they were due to a general or partial reversal of the spectral solar lines, or to a simple discontinuity in the spectrum, since they were too soon immersed in a flood of light, which put an end to the totality of the eclipse.

"About half-an-hour after the total eclipse the sun was obscured by clouds, so that I was unable to observe the end of the partial eclipse."

Miscellaneous.

THE "RANGOON."—Divers are still at work at the wreck of the Rangoon. Up to the 15th of December there had been recovered 319 packages of mails and thirty-two items of passengers' luggage.

THE VANINGEN CASE.—We have not yet, it would appear, heard the last of the notorious VanIngen case. We hear from Bangalore that one of the officers concerned is to be proceeded against at law for breach of promise of marriage.

THE SEYMOUR MEMORIAL WINDOW AT VEPERY.—It is expected that the handsome memorial window for the east end of St. Mathias' Church, Vepery, Madras, in memory of the late Rev. Mr. Seymour, will be permanently fixed immediately before Easter.

MILITARY.—The B Battery D Brigade Royal Horse Artillery have marched from Bellary to Bangalore, at which place they will remain until the brigade leaves for England at the end of this year. The Madras Government have sanctioned an estimate for Rs. 600, for converting the old coffee room and oil godown at the east side of the General Parade, Bangalore, into a school of army signalling. The Deccan Herald regrets to see it stated that typhoid fever is prevailing among the men of the 2-21th Regiment at Hyderabad. We have also heard of one or two cases at Jubbulpoor. The left wing of H.M.'s 45th Sherwood Foresters was ordered to be in readiness to embark for Burmah on the 13th January. The right wing and head quarters will leave Madras about the 2nd of next month.

CINCHONA.—Mr. W. G. McIvor, Superintendent Government Cinchona Plantations, Ootacamund, has reported to the commissioner of the Neilgherries that the ipecaehana plants supplied to the Burliar garden in May last are making very satisfactory growth, and that the climate seems well suited for the production of this valuable medicine. Mr. McIvor hopes that a portion of the plants now being forwarded to India by the Secretary of State will be sent to this garden for trial, as probably they may be grown more successfully in the neighbourhood of Burliar than in the north of Bengal. The natural locality of the ipecaehana is strictly tropical, and the great difference of temperature of summer and winter caused by higher latitudes may possibly affect the growth of the plant.

REGIMENTAL ACCOUNTS.—Mr. Fitzgerald, Officiating Deputy Accountant-General, Madras, who recently arrived at Calcutta, will, it is rumoured, be sent to the Camp at Delhi, where a committee of Native Cavalry corps is about to assemble to consider the best system of keeping regimental accounts of a private nature, that is, of funds created for the purpose of purchasing horses and so on, of which there are many. It has been found that between negligence and some ignorance in account-keeping on the part of commanding officers, much difficulty, and not a little fraud, have been called into existence. Lord Napier, we read, very rightly desires to place these funds on a safer and more intelligent basis, and it will be Mr. Fitzgerald's duty to devise some plan of bringing them under the scrutiny of the Audit Department, without in the slightest interfering with the action or liberty of commandants.

RAILWAYS.—The consulting engineer for railways, Major Prendergast, R.E., and Mr. Logan, the chief engineer of the Great Southern Railway, are at issue in some important particulars regarding the cost of certain portions of the work on the contemplated extension of that company's undertaking from Trichinopoly to Tuticorin. Mr. Logan has framed his estimates, he says, according to the light afforded him by past experience in the construction and working of the Great Southern Railway. Major Prendergast, on the other hand, and on behalf of the Government, has applied the pruning knife to Mr. Logan's estimates for the said extension to Tuticorin, a distance of 215 miles, to the extent of nearly £100,000 sterling. The matter is an important one, and has been referred to the Viceroy in Council, by whom, or by Mr. Molesworth, the consulting engineer for railways to the Government of India, we can hardly think Mr. Logan's figures and estimates can be approved of.—Madras Athenæum.

MAJOR J. J. MUIR.—We regret to announce the death, at Bangalore, on the 28th instant, after long suffering, of Major Joseph Johnstone Muir, Cadre 49th N.I., doing general duty at Bangalore. He entered the Madras Army in 1850, served in the second Burmese war, was present with the Martaban column during the advance to Tonghoo under the command of General Steel, K.C.B.—(Medal for Pegu),—served with the Madras Rifles against the mutineers in Bengal, was present at the defence of Azimghur against Koorer Sing's force in March, 1858, and joined in the pursuit of that chieftain with the force under Brigadier Douglas in April, 1858. Present at the actions of Azimghur and Ghossee, and at the attack on the rebels in the Jugdespore Jungle on 4th June, 1858.—(Medal.)—He was at one time adjutant of the corps, and as such was second to none in knowledge of his work and professional zeal. Since the breaking up of his own regiment he had done duty in various capacities with different corps, the last appointment that he held being that of officiating wing officer of the 27th N.I. He was very popular with his brother officers at Bangalore, by whom his loss is much deplored.—Madras Mail, Dec. 31.

THE TIRUPATTY HILLS.—On the 25th November Mr. Sewell and Captain Cox, Superintendent of Police, with about forty constables, an inspector and several other persons ascended the Sacred Hills of Tirupatty from the Chendragherri side. It would appear, writes a correspondent of the Trichinopoly Guardian, that "Government had at last come to the determination of throwing open the Tirupatty Hills, so long closed to all but pure Hindoos, and hence directed a sort of reconnoitring party to ascend them. I am informed that there was some show of resistance at first, but when it was found that the order had been given and that it would be carried out, the Maunth recommended passive if not pacific conduct on the part of those peculiarly good and pure mortals who have dwelt on the hills so long, and who, consequent on their exclusiveness, could not have known much of men and things. Mr. Sewell, C.S., and Captain Cox, S.C., are supposed to be the first Europeans that ever put foot on the Tirupatty Hills. I am told by a Brahmin friend that there is an extensive plateau on the top with numerous buildings, erected by the Rajahs of Mysore and Vencatagherri. Of course, the affair has taken the natives by surprise."

LITERARY.—The first number of Mr. R. Knight's new daily paper, The Indian Statesman or Gazette of Asia, has appeared at Bombay.

THE PERSIAN FAMINE.—The famine in Persia is still raging as fiercely as ever, and the number of deaths is said to be increasing daily. Rain has fallen at Bushire in torrents, but the prospects of agriculture are almost unaltered.

TACAVI ADVANCES.—The Government of India is said to have sanctioned a tacavi advance of Rs. 10,000 to the cultivators in certain talookas of the Nassick collectorate for the relief of distress there.

PRESS IN BOMBAY.—There are in all fifty-nine native newspapers at present published in the Bombay Presidency. This considerable number of native organs is a good sign, and the Presidency will be the better of so many opinion ventilators running through it.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR RAILWAY.—It will be observed that the G. I. P. Railway Company are now running through mail trains over the Kistna River into Raichore, in connection with the up and down south-east trains, and that extra charges for conveying passengers or goods over the river have been abolished.

SAILORS' HOME.—It has now been definitely settled by Government that the Sailors' Home shall not be built on the site on which the foundation-stone was laid by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh. The building will be erected on the ground at present occupied by the Post Office stables on the Apollo Bunder Road. As this piece of ground belongs to the Dockyard, it has been arranged that a piece of the reclamation nearer the bunder shall be given in exchange.—Bombay Gazette.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS.—We had till now imagined that native "Associations," which have so rapidly increased of late, were established not only for the purpose of promoting native interests, but also of promoting intelligence and good sense in native communities. But what are we to think when we hear that at a meeting of the Ahmedabad Association held the other day it was resolved to petition the agent of the B. B. and C. I. Railway Company against allowing low-class natives, such as Dheds, &c., to sit in the same carriages occupied by high caste Brahmins!—Bombay Gazette.

MILITARY.—The C 18 Royal Artillery, en route from Belgaum to Ahmedabad, were to arrive at Poona on or about the 7th Jan. On its arrival the families would be sent by rail to Ahmedabad. The battery consists of 5 officers, 129 non commissioned rank and file, 13 women, 31 children, 141 public and private followers, 112 horses, and 24 bullocks.—We regret to hear that Colonel W. Kirby, the Adjutant-General of the Bombay army, who proceeded on leave of absence, has been detained at Aden by reason of sickness. It is expected that he will have to go to England on medical certificate.—Poona Observer.—The 49th Regiment marched into Mhow on the morning of the 18th Jan. under the command of Lieut.-col. Gosling. H.M.'s 59th Regiment went into camp the following day, and marched for Neemuch and Nusseerabad on the 21st idem to relieve H.M.'s 8th (King's) Regiment, which goes on to Cawnpore.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S COLLECTIONS.

The Duke of Edinburgh visited the South Kensington Museum last Tuesday, and expressed his gratification at the arrangement of the drawings and objects of science and art which he has lent to the authorities there for exhibition. The entire collection has now been thrown open to the public. As a record of varied travel and its material results it has not been equalled in our time. The catalogue published by the Science and Art Department is headed, "The Cruise of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., Round the World in H.M.S. Galatea, in the years 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871," and its seventy-two closely printed pages are full of interest. The admirable series of water-colour drawings by Messrs. Brierly and Chevalier give life and colour to the whole. Mr. Brierly's drawings are especially fine, and those by Mr. Chevalier invite attention. The spectator, among other attractive scenes, is present at the interview between the Prince and the Mikado at Yedo, or accompanies the Royal party up the Peiho River on its way to Peking by moonlight, or looks on at the fight between a buffalo and tiger at Johore, or takes part in the tiger hunts in the plains of Bengal, or admires the matchless beauty of Bombay from Malabar Point, or joins in an elephant hunt at Ceylon. The Duke seems to have visited no country which has not given him a Royal welcome, and the addresses, of which only a very small number are shown, and the ornate mallets, and silver and gold trowels, and spades and hammers wherewith he has laid foundation stones or dug first sods, or given the crowning stroke of or to some great public work—each have separate cases. There is a heavy mallet or hammer of a dark wood, ornamented with silver, which is of special interest, for with it the final knock was given to the railway which connects Calcutta with Bombay. India, as might be expected, plays an important part in the Exhibition. There are chased silver salvers, gold inlaid kooftgari work; photograph albums of sandal-wood, inlaid with ivory and ornamented with gold; book-covers and inkstands; white marble elephants and camels; ivory, chowries, or fly flappers; Hindoo deities bought at Benares (for though we have dwelt upon the presents it must be understood that a great portion of the collection represents purchases made by the Prince); gold eggs presented at the Temple at Benares; countless articles in white marble inlaid with coloured stones and stands of arms which seem to include almost all conceivable weapons of destruction. There is the Ghoorka knife with black handle, presented by Sir Jung Bahadur, and the other Ghoorka knife, presented by the Maharajah Dirgeboj Singh Bahadur. There are the waved "krisses," with gold handles, from the Maharajah of Johore, and straight krisses and Javanese knives; there are daggers, buffalo-horn bows, steel war-quoits, shields of varnished rhinoceros hide, double-pronged spears, and quaint old brass-mounted matchlocks; a scimitar with ivory handle and gold mounts, presented by the Rajah of Puttiala, and another, studded with jewels, from the Rajah of Kappurtallah. We are selecting, be it understood, merely typical examples of the great curiosities which these armour-stands include, and necessarily omit many of surpassing interest. The Rajah of Jeypore contributes a short Jeypore sword; and the collection of chain and plate armour comprises many specimens given by the Indian Princes already named. There are a set of steel cock-spurs from Malacca, and part of the jaw of a gigantic kangaroo from Queensland. The visitor is interested in a cocoa-nut beautifully carved, and finds it was presented by Sir T. Madavarow, K.C.S.I., or is struck with the embroidery of a kummerbund, and finds it to have been worked expressly for the Duke by the Begum of Bhopal. Here is an embroidered shawl, presented by the city of Benares; there, a handsome neckcloth of ibex-wool and gold thread, from the Maharajah of Jummoo and Cashmere. Here is a handsomely bound copy of the Queen's book, "Leaves from our Journal in the Highlands," translated into the Mahratta language; there, a pair of large oyster-shells, mounted in silver, and a robe made from the tissue of the plantain, both from Tahiti. There is the head of a wild boar stuck by the Prince; here, a case of the sea-birds shot by him, with an albatross in the place of honour. There are also a fine collection of stuffed birds of gorgeous plumage, arranged by Mr. Ward, the naturalist; and several miscellaneous collections of quaint figures, ornaments, dresses, and odds and ends.

tive Council are entrusted with administrative departments, and have important executive duties to perform. The Legislative Council, though not in any sense a representative body, yet includes members who are connected with particular classes or with special interests. Thus there are native members belonging to various parts of India, and thus, at this moment, the chairman of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce is a member of the Legislative Council. The position of the Council of the Secretary of State for India is altogether different. It has no legislative authority; it has no administrative functions. It cannot even direct, although it may check, expenditure. It is a consultative body, constituted for the purpose of advising the Secretary of State in the exercise of those powers of review and of control which are the chief functions of the Government at home. How far home interests, as distinguished from the interests of the people of India, can legitimately influence decisions on the conduct of Indian administration is a very grave political question, which it is the special duty of the Secretary of State to consider and determine on his own responsibility, and on the responsibility of the Government of which he is a member. The most valuable element in his Council must always be men who have had Indian experience, and who know the very various and the very peculiar populations whom Indian legislation must affect. Accordingly, Parliament has provided that a large majority of the Council must have the special qualification of knowledge of India and of administrative experience in that country. In the old Court of Directors, however, there were generally a certain number of members who had not passed through an Indian career, but who, in one way or another, were concerned with the finances, or otherwise with the home affairs, of the East India Company. In this manner, together with the origin and traditions of the Company, a certain indefinite but felt connection was kept up between the Government of India and the commercial classes at home. The great difference of position between the old Court of Directors and the present Council—the abolition of valuable patronage—even the removal of the India-house from Leadenhall-street to Westminster,—above all, the complete transfer of the initiative to the Secretary of State and the comparatively inconspicuous duties which thus are left—are circumstances which have all contributed gradually to eliminate members who have not belonged to the Indian Services, and who have not that personal interest in, and that strong attachment to, India for its own sake, which have ever distinguished in a marked degree the servants of the Indian Government. It was natural that, under these circumstances, the composition of the Indian Council should attract attention, and the subject was brought before the House of Commons in the session of 1870 by Mr. Graves. On that occasion Mr. Gladstone stated, on behalf of the Government, the strongest objections to the particular terms of Mr. Graves's motion; but he explained at the same time that the Government were desirous of again introducing some greater variety of elements into the Council, and to that end would be prepared to recommend to the Crown, as opportunity might arise, the appointment of some members who had not belonged to the Indian Services, but who, from general ability or from knowledge of affairs, might add to the weight and consideration of the body. The Duke of Argyll, cordially concurring in the view then expressed by Mr. Gladstone, and desirous of giving it effect, on the occasion of a recent vacancy, advised the appointment of an eminent man, who did not belong to the Indian Services, who would not have been eligible under the statutory qualifications which apply to them, but who combined great general attainments and a high reputation at home, with fresh knowledge of the most difficult and urgent questions of legislation in India, and of the manner in which these must affect the interests and feelings of its people. I am instructed to add that, another vacancy having occurred by the retirement of one of the most distinguished members of the Council, whose interest in India is unabated, and whose knowledge of it has been maintained by the continuous devotion of nearly forty years in Parliament, in the Direction, and in Council, the Duke of Argyll has had much pleasure in advising the Crown to appoint Sir Louis Mallet, whose long and able services at the Board of Trade, and whose intimate acquaintance with commercial questions, are well known to the commercial classes of this country.—I have the honour to be, &c.,

Miscellaneous.

OFFICIAL.—Mr. Hubert Scott, of the firm of Scott, Corthorn, and Scotts, has been appointed to succeed his brother, the late Mr. Henry Scott, as broker to the Secretary of State for India in Council.

BRINDISI VIA MONT CENIS.—We have been again requested to warn passengers against attempting to proceed with the Indian mails through France. A daily contemporary states that carriages will be attached to the mail train for passengers; this is correct as far as the Italian railways are concerned, but France still refuses to permit any such convenience. To catch the mail passengers must not leave London later than Friday morning, arriving at Turin at nine P.M. on Saturday; the mail passes through at six A.M. on Sunday, leaving Bologna for Brindisi at two P.M. the same day.—Home News.

CAPTAIN GRINDLAY'S PICTURES.—Some time ago we remarked on certain pictures which Captain R. M. Grindlay, founder of the firm that still bears his name in Parliament-street, had presented to the India Office. The pictures were all painted by Captain Grindlay himself from sketches taken in Western India during the time he served there from 1802 to 1820. Since then a few more paintings by the same hand have been added to the India Office collection, and may now be seen in the Indian Museum. In return for these attentions, the gallant donor has lately received a very handsome letter of thanks from the Secretary of State in Council. By the older generation of our readers Captain Grindlay's name also may be remembered in connection with a handsomely illustrated volume, published in 1830, on the Scenery, Costumes, and Architecture of Western India, which established the author's fame as an able draughtsman.

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—On Friday, after the rising of the Court, Vice-Chancellor Malins had before him in Chambers representatives of the whole of the parties interested in the winding-up of this company. The summons was nominally for the purpose of obtaining leave to dispense with the advertisements usually issued with reference to the appointment of permanent official liquidators; but his Honour was much pressed by the solicitors for the Committee of Policyholders and Shareholders (Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton), to exercise his power of dispensing with the advertisements and making the appointment at once. This was strenuously opposed by several gentlemen representing important interests, and eventually his Honour dispensed with the ordinary advertisements, peremptorily appointed Monday next, at half-past four, for the purpose of finally deciding the matter. His Honour added that he hoped there would be no unseemly struggle for this appointment, his own idea being that, unless some valid reasons to the contrary were shown, the three gentlemen who had so faithfully discharged their duties as provisional liquidators should be continued in the office.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—The Malabar, having completed the embarkation of troops at Portsmouth for conveyance to Bombay, sailed on Jan. 25. calling in at Queenstown to complete her total complement. The subjoined list comprises the officers and men, with women and children, embarked at Portsmouth:—Major Brooke, 109th Infantry, in military command; Assistant-Surgeon Drew, R.A., in medical charge; Captain Le Motte, R.A., and wife; Lieutenant Lyates, R.A.; Captains Stockley and Roberts, R.A.; Lieutenant Vibert, R.A.; Captains Duchterlong and M'Causland, R.A.; Major Butt, R.A.; Captains Stevenson and Leishman, R.A.; Captain Wake, 21st Hussars, and wife; Captain Saunders, 1st bat. 14th Regiment; Lieutenant B. Firman, 1st bat. 14th Regiment; Lieutenant Lloyd, 2nd bat. 60th Regiment; Captain Papillon, 92nd Regiment; Captain Ramsey, 2nd bat. 25th Regiment, and wife; Major Hogge, Captain Murphy, and Lieutenant Dillon, 66th Regiment; Major Chichester, 39th Regiment, wife, and four children; Quartermaster Murphy, 2nd bat. 19th Regiment, wife, and two children; Surgeon Tullock, 1st bat. 11th Regiment; Assistant-Surgeon Leckie, Staff; Captain Welkinson, 105th Regiment; Deputy Inspector-General Massey, Staff, wife, and family; Lieutenant Burland, 85th Regiment; Captain Blake, 5th Lancers; Captain Montgomerie, R.H.A.; Captain Harrison, 55th Regiment; Lieutenant Cathcart, 109th Regiment; Lieutenant Williams, 1st bat. 5th Regiment; Captain Knight, 2nd bat. 19th Regiment; Lieutenant Le Breton, 1st bat. 5th Regiment; 525 men, fifty women, eighty children, and four female servants.

THE UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.—We are happy to be able to announce (the Standard says) that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, after having, in his usual fashion, held out obstinately to the last moment about the ejection of the Royal United Service Institution, has, as is his custom, yielded to public agitation that which he refused to justice and the merits of the case. It will be seen from the subjoined summary of his answer to the influential deputation which waited on him yesterday, that he has consented to leave this valuable society, which has rendered such good service to the cause of naval and military science, in undisturbed occupation, for the present, of the buildings in Whitehall-yard. In reply to the deputation, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that the three months' notice to quit had been served upon the institution with great reluctance, because, having visited the institution and seen its extent and the large and valuable collections which it contained, he felt that nothing but the exigencies of the public service would have justified him in taking such a step. He stated that although the notice to quit could not be withdrawn, he was happy to inform the deputation that he had been able to make arrangements by which the necessity of removing the institution, at least for the present, had passed away. Still, he thought it would be unwise in the council not to make inquiries with a view to placing the institution on a more secure and permanent footing; and he further stated that the Government were fully alive to the value of the institution, and that he should therefore be prepared, when the proper time arrived, to recommend that the Government should grant assistance towards placing it on such permanent footing.

BRITISH INDIAN TEA COMPANY.—The following is from the half-yearly report of the directors of the British-Indian Tea Company (Limited), to be presented at the meeting on January 29:—"The directors have to report to the shareholders that the crop of tea of 1871 has yielded about 280,000 lbs., being an increase of nearly 20,000 lbs. on the previous year. Final weights of the crop have not yet come to hand. The falling off, as compared with the estimate given in July last, is chiefly owing to deficient yield in the garden at Minniepore. The quantity arrived to date is 221,000 lbs., of which 189,000 lbs. have been sold, at an average of 1s. 9½d. per lb. gross, or 1s. 7½d. per lb. net. If the remainder of the crop realises only 1s. 6d. per lb. net, the total value of the teas of the past season will be about £22,000, against an outlay, which, it is believed, will not exceed £18,000, leaving a surplus on the season's operations of about £4,000. Messrs. Jardine, Skinner and Co.'s claim has been paid off, with interest, and there are no new liabilities, except those arising from current operations, which the crop of tea will more than cover, so that practically the company has no liabilities except to its own debenture stockholders, and the properties are entirely without incumbrance. The books of the company for the past six months have been audited by Dr. Tripe and found correct, and the accounts of the season will, as usual, be presented at the annual meeting in July. In conclusion, the directors feel that they may congratulate the shareholders on the improved condition and hopeful prospects of the company, and they trust, at the annual meeting, that the accounts to be then presented will fully substantiate the estimates they have given in this report of the result of the past year's operations."

MR. CLIFFORD RUSSELL'S ENTERTAINMENT.—On Wednesday evening last a gentleman who has thought fit to abandon official employment at the India office to assume the character of Proteus on the stage made his debut at the Westbourne Hall, Bayswater, under the pseudonym of Mr. Clifford Russell, in an entirely new monologue, or polygraphic impersonation piece, entitled "Laugh and Grow Fat." A numerous audience, including a number of gentlemen of the India-office with their families, supported the young entertainer's first appearance. It soon became apparent that the debutant's talents (like those of the late Charles Lamb, who was once, like Mr. Russell, a clerk in the India House) partook more of the humourist's than the accountant's qualities. The first—and we will at once say the weakest—portion of the entertainment—that describing the difficulties experienced by the narrator in choosing a profession—is given in evening dress, with the exception of two character sketches, viz., "Mr. Whimsey, the Fidgety Man," and "The Great Official Swell," with his song of "Ten to Four." In the course of the first half of the entertainment (which, by the way, is well strung together) the Christy Minstrels, music-hall singers, and other public amusers, are lightly and good-naturedly represented, and the topics of the day are pleasantly discoursed about. The second portion, with the alliterative title, "Lodgings to Let," runs off most smoothly. A Scotch "guid-wife" is the landlady, whilst an old bachelor with a love for sensational events, which he explains in a ditty called "Horrible News," a smoking habitué, "who fell into bad company," and a French usher, with a chanson militaire and cancan, are those who come in quest of apartments. The Parisian dance was most cleverly executed. Mr. Russell's gentlemanly youthful appearance and unassuming manner and good voice are much in his favour. He was entirely successful throughout a long and arduous entertainment.

PIPE-CLAY AS USUAL.—The London Newspaper Press has, almost without exception, commented in the strongest terms on the cruel and foolish order about great coats recently issued at Woolwich. Hitherto, during the winter months the soldiers of that, and, we believe, every other garrison, have been permitted to wear their great coats when walking out. Suddenly, and during the most inclement weather, the indulgence was withdrawn. The pretext is that a soldier had been found to have employed his great coat to conceal untidiness or dirtiness. We fancy, however, that economical considerations had something to do with the order. The great coat is supposed to be worn, not for any specific time, but until unserviceable; the less, therefore, it is used off duty, the longer period will elapse before it will become necessary to replace it. The tunic, on the contrary, is issued at stated intervals; and whatever happen, it must be worn its allotted time. If the tunic becomes shabby soon, so much the worse for the soldier; but if the great coat becomes unserviceable soon the State suffers. Hence, we fancy, this silly and unfeeling order. It is silly because the health of the men, some of whom having recently returned from India, have but thin linings to their tunics, will suffer. It is unfeeling because no employer is justified in exposing his servants to suffering for the sake of a few, or even many pence. If the men, in consequence of this order, go into hospital with coughs, rheumatism, and inflammation of the lungs, additional expense will be thrown on the State; and the cost of curing or replacing the sufferers will far exceed the sum gained by making the great coats last a little longer. The soldier's pride in the smartness of his appearance ought also to be considered; and it is notorious that one or two showers of rain will soon make a tunic look shabby. If the order was issued on the sole responsibility of the local military authorities and on the pretext alleged, they have committed an act which of itself shows their unfitness for command. If Mr. Cardwell is responsible, and has been actuated by motives of economy, he has been penny-wise, pound-foolish, and once more laid his administration of the army open to the shafts of contempt.—Naval and Military Gazette.

THE ALBERT ARBITRATION.—Lord Cairns has just given judgment at Arbitration-rooms, Waterloo-place, in a very important question, involving the appropriation of a medical trust set apart for the protection of the policy-holders and other creditors of the Medical Invalid and General Life Assurance Company on the occasion of its amalgamation with the Albert. It appeared that on the 21st September, 1860, an agreement for amalgamation was entered into between the two companies, and by another deed, dated the 14th of March, 1861, this agreement was carried into effect, and the life assurance fund was assigned to trustees upon certain trusts. The Albert now claimed the whole of this trust fund under the deed of the 21st March; but the Medical Invalid claimed that it was primarily subject to the costs of the winding up, and of any claim or demand in respect of any policy issued by them, or any other claim or obligation of theirs which the Albert had not paid or satisfied. It was also contended that the contract between the two companies was in effect that all the burdens of the Medical Society were to be transferred to the Albert, and for the purpose of carrying out that contract, and protecting the Medical Society against any breach of it, the life assurance fund was set apart; consequently before the Albert could touch this trust fund they must satisfy their covenant, and if there was any breach of it the Medical must come upon the fund for indemnity, for if the Albert had discharged its obligations there would have been no breach of covenant. Lord Cairns, in delivering judgment, said that there was no doubt that the fund must be administered according to the deed of March, 1861. The whole question arose upon the second point—"that all and every sum of money shall be devoted to the payment of liabilities due upon any policy issued by the Medical Invalid." If on Sept. 21, 1870, the Albert had continued business, although there were outstanding liabilities, the Albert would have had a right to come to the trustees of the fund and require it to be handed over to them; but in 1869 the Albert stopped payment, and subsequently the Medical Society was wound up, and all the claims on both companies became ripened, and came into immediate existence, and being all thus matured in this way they became provable against the Medical, and the simple question was—Were they claims and demands which the Albert ought to have satisfied? His lordship thought they clearly were. These things were the very subject of the covenant of the Albert, and their not having been satisfied within the ten years the Court had the duty of applying the funds, and it must be applied in satisfying those claims and demands. With respect to the costs of the winding up, it appeared that those costs were incurred by reason of the breach or non-performance of the covenant of the Albert, and that under the express words of the trust they would be entitled to be paid the costs of this winding-up. Considering the amount of the claims, it might only be a question of dividend, but they would be entitled to prove against the fund for those costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—The appeal case of Baboo Gunesli Dutt Singh v. Mugneram Chowdhry and others came before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on Thursday. This was an appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, in Bengal, and the circumstance, under which it was made, was of a peculiar character. The case was commenced on Jan. 24, and was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, dated 7th of March, 1866, by which a decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Billah Pirhoot, given on the 24th of June, 1865, in favour of the appellant was reversed, and his suit dismissed with costs. The suit was brought by the appellant to recover damages for defamation of character. He was a near relative of a rajah, and a person of position. In his plaint plea in September, 1864, to recover damages he declared that the honour and high position of "your petitioner himself can be compared in lustre to the effulgence of the meridian sun." There had been considerable litigation between the parties about some land, and an affray occurred, which ended in the death of one Kortee Narain Chowdry, and others were wounded. The appellant was arrested as concerned in the affray, and liberated on his own recognisance. Evidence was given by one of the respondents and others, and the appellant was dismissed. The respondent, Seetman Chowdry, it was alleged had presented a petition to the High Court, in which he repeated the same slanders against the appellant, and the appellant claimed 200,000 rupees as compensation. The proceedings in the case now before their lordships began, "Hail supporter of the Poor!" The Principal Sudder Ameen gave judgment for the plaintiff (the present appellant) for 20,000 rupees, on which there was an appeal, and the High Court reversed the decree, and the present appeal was lodged. Their lordships, after a patient hearing of the case, consulted with closed doors for some time, and ultimately decided that the judgment of the High Court be affirmed and the appeal dismissed. The case of Anundee Koonwur and others v. Khedoo Lall has terminated. Their lordships defer judgment. The case of Mussmut Ameerunissa and others v. Mussmut Aslimfoonissa, which is an appeal from the Presidency of Bengal, and which has been some years pending, raising a question whether the purchase of considerable property was made bona fide by a purchaser or on behalf of other persons; or whether a person who presided at a religious establishment, and sat on "the carpet used for prayers," was interested, has just been decided. Sir Montague Smith gave the judgment of the Court, dismissing the appeal with costs. Radhabenade Misser v. Kripa Moyee Debia.—This was an appeal from the Presidency of Bengal, and had been pending some years. After the case had occupied some time their lordships conferred, and Sir R. Collier gave judgment. Their lordships dismissed the appeal with costs.

Kristo Kinder Roy v. Burrodacant Sing.—This appeal has been before the Court, and occupied an entire day. Their lordships having conferred with closed doors for half an hour, it was announced that judgment would not be given on the present occasion.

THE LOSHAI CAMPAIGN.

The Times observes that the Indian service contains officers of enterprise, intelligence, and daring sufficient to qualify them for any military adventure, and nothing would have been easier than to select a commander who would, at any rate, have attempted, and would probably have carried through, this expedition in a rough-and-ready fashion at little cost. The same remark, indeed, was made on the occasion of the Abyssinian difficulty; but, considering the consequences possibly incidental to defeat, it was then, perhaps, wise to reduce the risk by enlarging the pecuniary outlay. No such serious complications, however, could have attended this raid into the Loshai territory. The utmost to be said is that here, as elsewhere, it was better to do the thing thoroughly, and that one successful expedition would be cheaper, as well as more creditable, than a renewal of the attempt after discomfiture. All such affairs, however, are matters of rational calculation and estimate, and in this case we cannot but fear that a margin far beyond reasonable requirements has been taken, with little regard to the expenditure involved. We should, we confess, be less disposed to compare the Abyssinian and Loshai Expeditions were not "Abyssinian experience" openly appealed to as suggesting the scheme of operations. It seems to us that Lord Napier of Magdala is repeating his tactics against an enemy not worth the pains, and, though it is true that the whole charge of the affair will probably be small compared with the bill for the Abyssinian war, the expense will fall upon an exchequer less able to support it. The great difficulty of Indian finance is the narrowness of the margin left for contingencies. All that Indian statesmen apparently can succeed in doing, and that very seldom, is to establish an equilibrium between ordinary income and ordinary expenditure. For extraordinary expenditure there are no resources available, so that every addition to the public outlay produces a deficit which it is hard to meet. We do not deny that these contingencies are to be anticipated; in fact, we admit at once in the case immediately before us that the expedition itself, with its necessary costs, was unavoidable, and could not have been evaded without a certain danger. But we cannot think the costs actually incurred were really necessary, and the Indian Government is in no position to be lavish with its money. Possibly there might have been no acceptable alternative, and it is but fair to credit the authorities on the spot with good information as well as judgment. Still, if ever a cheap war could be an admissible adventure, it would be in a country like India and on an occasion like the present. There are no such dangers in the North-East as in the North-West. No Mohamedan tribes bound together by bigotry and animated by fanaticism can be organised against us, nor are we in any respect on such dangerous ground as in the Sitana campaign. We might, no doubt, have experienced a repulse had our preparations been insufficient, and in India there is no saying what mischief a military disaster might entail. But financial mischief is also a thing to be apprehended, and that danger appears to have been left practically out of sight. None but the richest nations in the world could undertake a war in the fashion of the Abyssinian campaign, and yet that is the fashion gratuitously, as we cannot but suspect, adopted in this raid against a horde of barbarous villagers.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—At a General Court-martial, held at Bangalore on Dec. 1, 1871, Private Joseph Mooney, No. 593, of the 1st battalion 21st regiment, was arraigned on the following charges:—First: Having at Bangalore, on Nov. 5, 1871, stolen the following property belonging to Lance Corporal Henry Wilson, of the same battalion, namely, ten annas. Second: Insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, at Bangalore, on Nov. 5, 1871, struck with his clenched fist Lance Sergeant Alexander McGilvery, of the same battalion, at the same time saying, "I shall have your life for this," or words to that effect, the said Lance Sergeant Alexander McGilvery being his superior officer, and being in the execution of his office. Third: Having at Bangalore, between Nov. 6 and 7, 1871, made away with the following article of his kit, namely, one pair of boots. Fourth: Having at Bangalore, on Nov. 7, 1871, wilfully spoiled the following article of his kit, namely, one pair of boots. Finding: Guilty of all the charges. Sentence: The Court sentence the prisoner to suffer penal servitude for the term of five years, to be put under stoppages of pay until he shall have made good the following article, viz., one pair of boots. The Court do further sentence him to be discharged with ignominy from her Majesty's service. The ceremony of drumming out is dispensed with. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer, Exercise most wonderful power in promoting appetite, improving digestion, regulating the bowels, and removing nervousness and debility. The weakest will take no harm from the use of this alternative and tonic medicine, but will gradually regain their health. The strongest will preserve themselves from many of the mishaps into which their boasted strength and fearlessness of results often betray them. Long-suffering invalids may look towards this rectifying and revivifying medicine with the certain hope of having their maladies mitigated, if not removed, by their means. In short, for all ages, circumstances, and conditions, Holloway points out the treatment which is competent to check the progress of disorders in, and expel its seeds from, the human frame.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Jan. 15; Agra and Madras, Jan. 13; Calcutta, Jan. 12.

LORD MAYO'S arrival at Delhi on the morning of the 8th, where he was welcomed by Lord Napier, Mr. Davies, and a good many other officials, to say nothing of the usual salutes on such occasions, was immediately followed by a visit to his camp, pitched beyond the Ridge, near that of the Commander-in-Chief. At 10.30 A.M. his Lordship witnessed a grand parade of some 15,000 troops on the spot where Sir H. Barnard's little force of barely half that number were hard pushed not fifteen years ago to uphold the supremacy of our arms against a whole province in rebellion. Among the spectators were the Maharajahs of Gwalior and Bhurtpore, besides many chiefs of less note. The marching past was a memorable sight, and several native as well as British regiments acquitted themselves well. This was followed by a series of grand manœuvres, including some fine movements of cavalry and artillery massed together under the special orders of Sir H. Tombs himself, who commanded the 3rd Division.

THE evening was taken up with a levee and a brilliant ball, at which the Rajah of Vizianagram danced the square dances. On the 9th Lord Mayo had interviews with the native chiefs, and was present at a grand assault of arms, in which Troop-sergeant-major Mayes, of the 11th Hussars, carried off the prizes for good swordsmanship and skill with the lance. Among the prize-winners were several natives also. In awarding the prizes, Lord Napier declared it would not be his fault if no camp of exercise were held another year. On the 10th began the real business of the week. General McMurdo, with about 7,000 men, had to hold a position of about five miles from the Canal at Badli to the Jumna at Berari against General Travers, advancing with 10,000 men from the Kurnal and Meerut roads; two brigades of horse and guns being handled by Sir H. Tombs, the foremost artillery officer in the hard fighting of 1857 round Delhi. All through Wednesday the sham battle lasted, until Tombs had virtually turned McMurdo's right, and Travers's infantry were pressing forward when darkness dropped its curtain on the scene. So fatal however was the position for McMurdo on the Ridge that the umpires awarded the victory to Sir H. Tombs. Among the losses recorded against General McMurdo were the captures of the 1st and 40th N.I. and of two troops of the 11th Hussars. This was the last entertainment at which Lord Mayo "assisted," for the next morning he started back to Calcutta.

OF the Loshai Expedition we have accounts more or less detailed to the 7th January from General Bouchier, and to the same date from General Brownlow. The progress of both columns had been hindered only by natural obstacles since Dec. 27, when a party of Loshais got to Bouchier's rear at Tipai Mukh, and wounded or carried off a number of elephants after killing several of the mahouts. A detachment of the 42nd N.I. under Captain Harrison speedily recovered all but four of the missing beasts. Owing to renewed movements against his rear. General Bouchier sent part of the 42nd under Colonel Rattray to attack the villages of Kolell on the 29th. The march of both columns has been slow, the hills becoming steeper as they advanced, Sookpilall and his son appear at length to have thrown off all disguise and made common cause with their wild countrymen. No terms have yet been made on General Bouchier's side, except with the Kolell people, and the destruction of stores and crops continues as before. General Brownlow on the 3rd January was at Savoonga, 4,000 feet above the sea. There he had received a submissive message from the Syloo Chief, but would not stay his progress until that gentleman chose to come in himself. Up to the 7th no further move towards peace was made by the latter, who burned his village at the English commander's approach.

GENERAL BROWNLOW was still pressing forward over country of which he can give no exact indication by the map, as it "ceases to be correct." General Bouchier on the 4th moved seven miles to the Toweetie river with the Sappers and a wing of the 44th N.I. He reports all quiet there, and the Loshais coming into camp with fowls and vegetables, which they eagerly barter for salt. These visitors are described as civil, quiet, "cleaner than most hill-men, and not at all the savages we expected to find them." The general is endeavouring, it seems, to separate the western tribes as far as Poiboy from the eastern ones, who are deemed the more obstinately hostile of the two.

SOME of the Indian papers still harp upon the wanton cruelty of destroying the enemy's stores of food; but that is the usual cry when this or any sort of warfare is going on. Humanitarians and partisans were equally loud in vilifying the Germans during the late war with France, for acts justified by all rule and precedent. Wars like revolutions are not to be carried on with rose-water, and to burn your enemy's stores in order to bring him to terms is in this case no worse than starving a fortified city into surrender. The Loshais have to be taught a severe lesson, and if fortune smiles on our troops, that lesson they are probably beginning to learn. Pity for such ruthless and treacherous savages hardly becomes those who look to the well-being of our Indian empire.

A BOMBAY paper tells a story of which we can only say, Se non e vero, e ben trovato. A Madrassie going on a journey took with him some money and jewels, and a monkey of which he was very fond. The poor man however was waylaid, robbed, and murdered by a party of ruffians, who went their way after throwing the corpse into a dry well, and covering the latter up with twigs and dry leaves. But they had overlooked the monkey, who saw the whole proceedings from the top of a tree. As soon as the road was clear, the intelligent beast set off for the Tehsildar's, or police officer's house, and having drawn his attention by cries and moans, lured him on by dumb signs to the tell-tale spot. In due time the body was discovered, and then with the monkey's help the Tehsildar found the stolen property where the thieves had buried it. He then followed the monkey to the bazaar. There the monkey picked out one of the murderers, ran after him, and with his teeth held him fast by the leg until the man was secured. This feat he seems to have repeated until all the murderers were caught. It is added that they have since confessed their crime, and been committed for trial before the Tellicherry Court. An Agra contemporary suggests that such a monkey ought to be made an inspector of police. Would not that be rather a descent for the monkey? We should like to hear more about him, how he behaves for instance in giving his evidence before the magistrate. What sort of equivalent for an oath would be required of him, and would the identity of the culprits be proved by his showing his teeth? If the story should prove to have any foundation, it will deserve a prominent place in the next edition of one of Dr. Frank Buckland's amusing volumes.

A Times telegram of February 3 from Calcutta states that after the suppression of the Kuka rising in Sirhind, Deputy Commissioner Cowan selected fifty men to be shot. Of these one broke away, ran at Mr. Cowan, and was cut down. The others were blown from guns on Mr. Cowan's own responsibility. Mr. Forsyth, the Commissioner at Umballa, executed sixteen more. The whole band, which never numbered 300, has been literally hunted down; sixty-six men and two women, terrified, half famished, and twenty-nine of them wounded, submitted in the end to four men. The whole thing occurred within forty-eight hours. The Government is said to have ordered an immediate inquiry. The public feeling, which at first was hesitating, is said to be partially turning against the executions.

THE appointment of Sir Louis Malet to the Indian Council means the retirement of one of its oldest and most distinguished members, Sir James Hogg, whose name has been prominently connected with the home government of India for the last forty years. We are glad to hear that Sir James will exchange the post he has so long adorned for the no less honourable if less arduous duties of a Privy Councillor. His long list of services must be recorded in due time at proper length. It is probable that two more veterans in the Council will shortly follow Sir James Hogg's example.

It is to be regretted that speakers addressing the National Indian Association ignore the patent facts of Anglo-Indian history, and the rules laid down by the Association itself. At the first annual meeting, held at Bristol on the 24th November, Canon Girdlestone described the English conquest of India as the result of unprovoked aggressions made "solely from the greed of conquest" upon peaceful peoples. We should advise the reverend Canon to study the history of the period to which he refers with the help of any standard work on the subject. Still more unfortunate was his headlong attack on caste, to which he ascribed the Indian Mutiny, the late outbreak in Bareilly Jail, and the great hindrance to all "religious, moral, social, and domestic improvement." Caste, we are told, is "the curse of India," and the only way of counteracting it is to "preach the Word;" with great tact and caution indeed, but still to preach it. Will nothing teach our clerical advisers to understand what they are talking about, and to respect the conditions under which they are invited to speak?

MAJOR-GENERAL FRANCIS R. CHESNEY, whose death occurred a few days ago, was one of those soldiers who best served their country, and did most honour to their own profession in other fields than that of arms. Entering the Royal Artillery in 1804, he was a captain without special service or hope of seeing any, when the war of 1828-9 between Russia and Turkey tempted him to place his sword at the disposal of the latter power. Too late, however, to join in the fray, he had to content himself with visiting the camps of the rival armies, and going over the ground on which they had just before been manœuvring against each other. His researches afterwards bore fruit in a history of the war; a work in which the English captain had already been forestalled by Moltke himself, then a major in the Prussian service. His labours, however, commended him to Sir Robert Gordon, our ambassador at Constantinople, under whose sanction Captain Chesney went first to Egypt and then into Mesopotamia, to explore and report upon different routes overland from England to India. His Egyptian travels and observations led him not only to foretell the possibility of making Egypt the point of transit for Indian mails, but also to assert against many leading engineers of his day that the question of cutting a canal through the Isthmus of Suez was merely one of time and outlay. On this point indeed we have lately had the evidence of M. de Lesseps himself, who nearly forty years afterwards publicly acknowledged the debt he and his company owed to General Chesney, as the virtual author of the Suez Canal. Next came Major Chesney's journeys of exploration through Syria and Mesopotamia, which have since led up to Mr. Andrew's project for a railway along the Euphrates Valley, and to the Select Committee appointed last year for the purpose of testing the value of that and the rival schemes to lessen the distance between England and India. The first fruit of these journeys, undertaken virtually at his own risk and cost at a time when very little was known and much feared regarding the countries he went to explore, was the memorable Euphrates Expedition which was placed under the charge of Colonel Chesney in 1835. Of the two steamers with which, after many difficulties and delays, he began to descend the Euphrates, one went down to the bottom with twenty of her crew in a fearful hurricane. Colonel Chesney with a few more managed to save themselves; and the survey, of which 400 miles had then been accomplished, was carried out on board the remaining steamer. It settled once for all the preliminary question as to the practicability of the old Mesopotamian route, by which the trade of Europe had once passed into central and southern Asia.

FOR all these services Colonel Chesney received but sorry payment from those who had employed him. He returned home only to witness the signs of mourning for King William IV., the best friend of the Euphrates Expedition. For those who had served under him he succeeded at last in getting promotion and the payment of their expenses, but for himself he obtained nothing at the time, and it was several years before even a brevet lieutenant-colonelcy in his regiment was granted to the man who had pioneered the future path of our Eastern trade. Some hopes were given him of a special pension; but in the meantime he went to command an artillery brigade in China, and the reward once talked of came to nought. At the request of the Government he undertook a history of his former enterprise; but the backwardness of the Treasury in the matter of reimbursements left them still his debtors when he died. From Oxford however he obtained a Doctor's Degree, and the Royal Society paid him such honour as it could bestow. In 1851 Colonel Chesney brought out his large work and maps on the Euphrates Expedition. Some years ago he published his "Observations on the Past and Present State of Firearms," with special reference to what were then the newest improvements in rifled muskets and artillery. He lived to the good old age of eighty-two, long enough to see the final success of one scheme, the Suez Canal, for which he had paved the way, and the approaching execution of another, the Euphrates Valley Railway, which his past labours alone had rendered possible.

If the Army Defence Committee hope to carry out the meaning of their title, they will do well to avoid all needless clashing with the older Committee headed by Colonel Phillips. Why for instance should they propose to draw up "a proper and unambiguous form of petition" in the room of that which Colonel Phillips had already provided for the claimants of bonus compensation? From an article in the Homeward Mail, which the Times by a curious slip ascribed to ourselves, we gather, so far as we can gather anything from so confused a word-tangle, that some great peril lurks in the process of asking her Majesty to grant compensation for loss of bonus "on the principle admitted in Clause 4 of the Forces Regulation Act of 1871." Where the perils lie we cannot for the life of us make out. In fact the whole article has baffled all our attempts to comprehend it. No doubt it was meant to convey some definite meaning.

but the only idea we can extract from it is that, for some reason or another, the petition drawn up by Colonel Phillips has given cause for alarm to the Army Defence Committee. "A note of warning" has therefore been sounded, "which may yet be in time to prevent further mischief." The Defence Committee are going to draft "a very simple and concise form of petition," resting the claim to compensation "not on the principle admitted in Clause 4. of Mr. Cardwell's Act, but on the principle admitted and sanctioned by the Court of Directors in their despatch of November 29, 1837." Officers are to ask for compensation "equal to the sums which they would have received, according to the custom of their regiments, from their juniors, if they had retired therefrom prior to 1861." This at least is plain enough: it is the one plum in the whole pudding. But either words have lately changed their meaning, or else this is exactly what Colonel Phillips asked for, when he claimed redress in accordance with the principle of Clause IV. in Mr. Cardwell's Act. The words of that Clause are as easy to understand as any words can be. The Commissioners are empowered to grant officers of the new Line regiments "a compensation equal to the sums they would have received according to the custom of their regiments from the junior officers of their regiments, had they retired therefrom prior to" a certain date. In other words these officers are to get their full bonus, the market value of their commissions, as they stood on the 31st October, 1871. That is the principle involved in the Act, not only in Clause IV., but in those pertaining to the old purchase regiments; and that is the principle for which the old Indian officers have so long fought in vain. Their right to some compensation was formally conceded by Lord Cranborne in 1866, but the amount claimable in each case and the one principle on which all claims should be adjusted have ever since remained in dispute. Repayment to each officer for his past outlay, less all kinds of unfair deductions, was the guiding principle of Lord Cranborne's despatch. Payment in full of the bonus each officer stood to receive before a certain date is the guiding principle of Mr. Cardwell's Act; and Clause IV. brings the application of that principle directly home to the officers of an army in which the purchase system, however widely established and formally sanctioned, had never served as the very mainspring of its existence. The question of dates in this connection is wholly beside the mark. Who asks for "the status quo of October 1871?" Certainly not those who sign a petition based on the principle of Clause IV. What they demand is the same measure of justice which has already been granted to the officers of the Imperial Army, compensation namely not for past outlay, but for the return that outlay would have assured them had things gone on as they were in 1858 or 1860. This too is the apparent aim of the Defence Committee. What then is the good of wasting time and strength in wrongheaded carping at the work done by older and more experienced toilers in the same field?

BREECH-LOADING RIFLES.—CONCENTRATION OF PATENTS.—Very considerable efforts having been made to improve our national arms and ammunition, and important improvements having resulted, the next step taken has been to let production follow upon invention, and to establish suitable factories. This is, we observe, about to be done with regard to the manufacture of the best rifles and ammunition by means of commercial enterprise. The National Arms and Ammunition Association (Limited) lately formed at Birmingham has agreed to purchase all the British and foreign patents by which Mr. Martini's various inventions in breech-loading small arms are secured, and as the systems of Mr. Peabody and Mr. Westley-Richards are considered to be in some respects similar to those of Mr. Martini, this company has also acquired the sole right of manufacture in this country of military small arms under their patents. All the patentees have manifested their confidence in this enterprise by allowing a large portion of their remuneration to depend upon royalties. It is not, however, intended to limit the manufacture to these three systems, but to make any arm for which orders of sufficient magnitude may be obtained. It is satisfactory to observe that Major General Dixon, C.B., who during the last seventeen years has been the superintendent of her Majesty's Small Arms Factory at Enfield, will take an active and practical part in the new association formed at Birmingham, which has now taken up the "Westley-Richards Arms and Ammunition Company's factories and business."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, February 6, 1872.

MR. BOWRING ON MYSORE AND COORG.

In his volume of Eastern experiences, the late Chief Commissioner of Mysore and Coorg gives a very full account of the provinces, a part of which had lately been described by Mr. Elliott, the "Mysore Planter."* What Mr. Bowring's book may lack in personal and human interest, and in raciness of style, is made up by the fruits of a wider learning and a more varied experience of Indian countries and Indian politics. With Mr. Elliott we enter the homes of his native friends and followers, share their pleasures and their troubles, study their characters, and learn all about their habits, feelings, and ideas. Mr. Bowring, on the other hand, goes more especially into the history, ethnology, and local features of the countries he describes. About half the volume is taken up with Mysore, a country "second in rank of the Queen's feudatory provinces in India," with an area of about 28,000 square miles, a population of four millions, and a revenue of more than a million sterling, of which nearly four-fifths are derived from land. It may be said to form an immense table-land, studded either with bold isolated hills called droogs, or with ranges sometimes reaching a height of nearly 7,000 feet. The general level of the province, which contains hardly a square mile of level ground, is more than 2,000 feet above the sea. The country is well-watered and fruitful, but very feverish, partly from great alterations of temperature, and partly from the malaria caused by the decomposition of the sienite rock with which it is covered.

Of more than twenty "droogs" in Mysore, the most remarkable is Sávandrug, a mass of granite rising 4,024 feet above the sea, and approachable only by a narrow road that winds through jungle up the face of the hill. It was lucky for Lord Cornwallis's army that the fortress which crowns this natural stronghold was abandoned by its defenders without a blow. Twenty-eight miles off lies the healthy station of Bangalore, so called, it is said, from the beans which a woman of Mysore once gave to a starving prince, who afterwards rose to power there and held his court in Bengaluru, or the City of Beans. Stormed by Lord Cornwallis in 1791, the place eventually became a large station for British and native troops. As happens so often in India, the site for the cantonments was perhaps the worst that could have been chosen; but the climate atoned for all blunders, and English soldiers are wont to play at cricket eight months out of the twelve in a station lying on the 13th degree of north latitude. It must be remembered however that Bangalore is at least three thousand feet above the sea. The city and station between them contain 132,000 inhabitants, mostly Hindoos. It is to be hoped that Mr. Bowring's proposal to secure for the Indian Government full ownership of this important station and its surroundings, in exchange for the cession of Seringapatam to the ruler of Mysore, will in due time be carried out.

Owing to the extinction of its landed aristocracy and the absence of very rich and powerful merchants, the social leadership in Mysore belongs to the official classes, that is in effect to the Brahmans who hold nearly all the government places and a good deal of the land of the country. In the Bangalore district the soil, as red as that of Devonshire, is very fruitful, and the ryots are skilful husbandmen in their own way, however strange to our ideas may be their habit of growing several kinds of crops at one time in the same field. Most of them are well to do, making a brave show of jewelry and bangles on fair-days; and this may partly account for the independence of their manners as compared with those of the "cringing Bengali." The old village community, once prevalent all over India, still retains many of its primitive features in Mysore. One of the village officers is the Nirjanti, who works the sluices and distributes the water of the tanks. Some of these are 300 years old and ten miles round. A tank when full, is reckoned to hold six months' supply of water. These tanks often occur in regular chains, so as to ensure the storage of every available drop of water. They are solidly built as a rule, with embankments fifty feet wide, sluices at either end, and immense escape-weirs made of large stones. When the smaller tanks run dry for a season, their beds are planted with "gram," and Government takes its share of the produce. A revision of the land-revenue is now going on, according to the Bombay system, "the only settlement in India of which it can be said that the Government revenue always increases under it, that the waste land is invariably taken up for cultivation, and that the assessments never break down." That is high praise from a Bengal Civilian. The Bombay system, be it remembered, assesses the land-revenue mainly on the heads of villages, and the assessment runs for thirty years.

In the Hâsan district, which borders on South Canara, are many of the coffee-planters whose industry has created a new and thriving trade for Mysore. Those of Hâsan have already "converted a wild and hilly region of jungle into a smiling garden." This part of Mysore was ruled in the eighth century by Jain kings of the Belâl or Haisal race, traces of whom are still to be seen in the magnificent temple at Halibede, whose outside is richly carved with layers of stone-pictures and scroll-patterns, hardly to be matched for beauty and elegance in any other part of India. These carvings, wrought by a Brahman architect, still serve as a model for the carved sandalwood of Mysore. Another temple of singular beauty may be seen at Bêlûr in the same district. Indrabetta contains some pretty temples and a picturesque pillar. Srâvan Belgûl, where dwells the high-priest of the Jains, is renowned for the excellence of its brass vessels, which are sent to all parts of the country. On the hill of Chandrabetta towers a statue of a Jain deity fifty-seven feet high. Cut out of the rock on which it stands, it has a certain dignity of attitude, with the calmly gazing countenance so common in Buddhist statues; but the ears are "long pendent flaps," the hair curls spirally over the head, and the legs dwindle to half their proper length. Hâsan also boasts its Holy Hill of Tirupati, ascended by a long flight of steps, at each of which the dutiful pilgrim is expected to crack a cocoa-nut. The hill is sacred to Vishnu under the name of Venkata. The same district owns several settlements of native Christians, who mostly cultivate the soil. In other parts of the province however they follow various callings, from trade and soldiering to menial service. Tippoo had a whole regiment of Christians, who once rose in arms to prevent him from destroying one of their churches. In Mysore too, it was that the excellent Abbé Dubois pursued his missionary labours for a quarter of a century. The church he built at Sathalli has since grown into a fine building, with a convent attached to it. The neighbouring villages contain about a thousand Christians who may be seen trooping to mass on Sunday at "the sound of the church-going bell."

Most of these are caste-Christians—that is, Christians who retain all the social usages pertaining to their caste. We are not at all surprised at Mr. Bowring's "mortifying admission" that these people are more moral and better servants of Government than Christians who drop their caste. In this respect the Romish missionaries have been wiser than their Protestant rivals, whose obstinacy in denouncing caste has materially hindered the work of conversion among the more respectable classes of natives. Even as it is, the native Christians, according to Mr. Bowring, are generally looked down upon by their neighbours, especially the Brahmans, whose influence appears to be very great indeed among the simple folk of Mysore. One of these gentlemen, a sort of high priest in the country, leads the life of an ascetic, but wears a tiara covered with jewels, and sandals wrought with silver. This holy Guru travels in grand state. His palanquin is always carried sideways so as to fill up the road; a long train of Brahmans and disciples follows him wherever he goes; and at every village where he stops all the Hindu inhabitants turn out to give him a welcome. Of course he never deigns to enter a white man's house or tent, so his rare visits to white officials come off under a tree or a kind of arbour got up for the purpose.

Mr. Bowring, like Mr. Elliot, pays a respectful tribute to Sir Mark Cubbon, who administered the province from 1834 to 1860, retiring at last amid the unfeigned regrets of a whole people. A few years after his departure the titular sovereign of Mysore adopted an heir, who was formally installed in 1868 on the death of his adoptive grandfather. This is the young prince whose education was lately entrusted to Colonel Malleison. Mr. Bowring gives an interesting sketch of the late Raja, whose shortcomings as a ruler obliged Lord W. Bentinck to relieve him of the cares of government about forty years ago. Now that we are training his successor for the throne from which he himself was degraded, it would be well, urges our author, to prepare the country also for its future king by gradually reducing the number of English officials, and appointing natives in their room. At the same time he holds that native rule ought to be wielded as far as possible on English principles, in careful accordance with some written law, instead of reflecting each change of whim on the part of an idle or a headstrong ruler.

There is a noteworthy description of Coorg Land and its hardy inhabitants, the Swiss of Southern India. Two chapters are devoted to an excellent sketch of Sikh history before the annexation of the Punjab, and to the Sikh invasion of the Cis-Satlaj provinces. A pleasing selection from Mrs. Bowring's letters closes a volume full of interest and information. The only great fault we can find with the book is the want of anything like an index or a copious table of contents, a want which others besides "indolent reviewers" are certain to regret.

THE INDIAN VERNACULARS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—It might be naturally expected that when one nation has for upwards of two hundred years been placed in authority over another that the executive portion, at least, of the governing nation would be able to communicate freely with those over whom they rule. In India, however, the knowledge of the vernaculars of the East possessed by the civil and military officials has been over and over again proved to be very superficial and limited. It is true that a small number by dint of practice learn to understand the papers read to them, but there are probably not half-a-dozen who could read a police report off hand, and translate it without gross mistakes, and not two who could write, without errors, the private orders or secret instructions requisite in cases of emergency. I challenge the Governor General of India in Council to order the experiment to be made, confident that the result would be to confirm my remarks.

Admitting that the acquisition of the language is not everything, yet that the rulers of a country should be competent to transact business for themselves, to hear cases personally, and decide upon the evidence first hand, and, in short, to be accessible to the people, would appear an obvious necessity, although (strangely enough) it is not considered so in India.

The majority of Competition-Wallahs and military servants are here satisfied with speaking a broken and absurd jargon so long as they can make the people understand their meaning.

One great means of gaining the respect of the natives is to speak their language with propriety—i.e., without vulgarisms, and with the accent and idiom used by their own gentry.

Indian students who speak and write the English language consider it a disgrace not to be able to convey their sentiments grammatically. Some of the young men who come out in the Indian Civil Service with prizes for their Hindustani are well versed in grammar, ready to split a hair upon some particular use of genitive, dative, or ablative case, or the peculiar application of a particle; but they are lamentably deficient in the art of carrying on a simple conversation. They make themselves understood much in the same way as the native cook-boys in European barracks converse with the soldiers. There you may hear a young urchin glibly uttering some such sentence as this:—"Me very bijji (busy) to-day, tu-mara me go bujjar (bazaar). Maaster no buy dat tings me get cheep." The soldiers, accustomed to this jargon, readily understand their cook-boys; but what would a native gentleman think of a civilised and highly-educated official should he address him in a similar style? Let me ask this question of the English authorities in India—If an Indian or Persian nobleman, supposed to be educated, were to speak such imperfect and lame English, would it not inevitably expose him to ridicule, if not to contempt?

What is more common during the plays enacted at the Hooli and other festivals than to see natives enacting the part of English magistrates and imitating their broken Hindustani? The native dressed in European costume, his face whitened with chalk, appears on the stage, stamping his feet and showing his fists, and summoning the village Kotwall in an angry tone, says—"Ham das Kooli, Kal fajar, do Murgi ka bachcha mangta hai. Tum Malum?"

The Kotwall, placing his hands palm to palm, answers—"Hân Khudâwand, sab Janta." The Sahib "Gadda tum Khabardar." Then the Sahib attacks a rustic passing by—"Well, well, tum Kala Admi, kai wasti Salaam nahi kya? Ham bait marega."

I am not exaggerating, such scenes as these are of daily occurrence. The natives are submissive and do not laugh at the ridiculous Hindustani of their superiors to their faces, but when amongst themselves they certainly do not spare them, and generally sum up with the significant remark, "Bhai, Ikbâl Frung aaj chamakta hai,"—(Ah! my friend! fortune smiles on the English to-day), i.e. "every dog has his day."

I attribute most of this disgraceful ignorance of the language of the country to the inefficiency of the teacher employed by the Government. When a young civilian or military officer is once in India he does not seem to care much for the opinion of the natives, and takes but little pains to improve himself in Oriental learning.

I can assure you, Mr. Editor, that all classes of natives, high and low alike, are influenced by this consideration, and a gentleman, who speaks our language as a gentleman should, invariably gains respect amongst us, while one who contents himself with a vulgar and ridiculous jargon is regarded with supreme contempt.

The learned Hindustani Professors in Europe have in most instances a scholarlike acquaintance with the grammars and literature of the various Oriental languages, but how few of them have any practical facility in writing or speaking them! There are, of course, exceptions to the rule, and we occasionally read in the Urdu Akhbârs poetical and prose contributions in Persian and Hindustani from one Mr. E. H. Palmer, which are the admiration of all educated Indians. There is something radically wrong in the system of teaching which is at present employed. During the reign of the Court of Directors we were wont to attribute to "Nepotism" the fact that the Directors were somewhat reluctant to make the examinations in Hindustani severe, lest some of their protégés might not reach the required standard; but now, although everything is thrown open to competition, we fail to recognise a corresponding improvement in the knowledge of the vernaculars possessed by civil and military servants of the Government.

Is it not preposterous that cadets are allowed to take up French instead of Hindustani for India?

A certain knowledge of Hindustani ought to be made compulsory on every Military aspirant. Were this to be done we should hear no more instances of a Vellore mutiny remaining undiscovered because an officer could not understand the native who attempted to disclose it. During the Sepoy mutiny many important communications, in consequence of the officials' inability to decipher them for themselves, or write direct, became divulged to the enemy, and much loss of life and property was the result.

What is the cause of the mismanagement and the enormous annual loss to the Government in the D.P.W. but ignorance of the native language? In 1834, when I was a regimental Munshi, I repeatedly, through the medium of the Englishman, invited the attention of Government to this crying evil, but without effect. Just at that time a standing order was issued that no subaltern officer should be allowed to hold the appointment of interpreter, unless he had passed an examination in the native languages. This proviso was considered by every one very wise and salutary. But, strange to say, the officers of the Engineering Corps were never placed under the restriction. The nature of their duty is such as to require far more communication, both oral and epistolary, with all classes of natives than that of a regimental interpreter, and their deficiency in this respect placed them so entirely in the power of their subordinates, that as I have myself seen, the Government funds were grossly wasted, and a system of downright loss was carried on by the contractors. At Addiscombe it is true, Hindustani was taught, but in so inefficient and superficial a manner as to be almost useless.

The subject of appointing a competent Munshi in England to instruct the civil and military aspirants having been much discussed amongst the European officials in India, my esteemed friend, patron, and pupil, Colonel S. D. Riley, himself an eminent and most distinguished Arabic scholar, in 1835 forwarded an application from me for some such post, accompanied with testimonials, and addressed to the Lieutenant-governor of Addiscombe. I have not, however, to this day received a reply, and, on inquiry, was informed that the Court of Directors had a great prejudice against educated Indians interfering with the machinery of the Home Department. That the spoken Oriental languages cannot be properly taught except by natives of sound education, is a fact which must be patent to the most ordinary capacity.

Having had the benefit of studying the English language as early as 1813, and having been constantly engaged as Arabic and Persian tutor to European gentlemen for upwards of half a century, I shall not be suspected of any ulterior motives of personal interest in recommending the Home Government to give more encouragement than heretofore to the study of the Oriental languages and literature. I sincerely hope that some steps may be taken towards promoting an improvement in this respect, and should this letter succeed in drawing attention to so important a subject, I shall perhaps trouble you with another communication at a future time.—Your most obedient servant,

MIR ZULFIKAR ALI,

A retired Munshi and Translator.

THE PURCHASE OF FRENCH INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I am much obliged for your comprehensive notice of my published letter on the "French Possessions in India," which letter I have recently observed has been copied entire into the Madras Times. Since your remarks I have heard it said, What would be the use of our purchasing these possessions, when, in time of war with France, Pondicherry (like the Portuguese Goa, in the event of a war with Portugal) would immediately change masters? But I wish to see the purchase effected during peace, with advantage to both parties, especially at the present time, so as to avoid political complications before or after war. America, Germany, and Russia—whose eye in the East never sleeps—may have the desire of one day gaining a footing in India, and must wonder at our having bought out the Danes in 1845, and not endeavouring to do the same with the French (or Portuguese) in 1872! The King of Holland has just set a wise example by selling his colony of Guinea to England. Why not the unity of our Indian as well as that of a German Empire? Were England to go to war with France, and, as a preliminary arrangement, seize Pondicherry, I am strongly of opinion that, if we were victorious, with our usual good nature we might return the "Paris of the East" to France—as has been done four or five times already—though I am very far from supposing, if we once took possession, that such would be the case with the present vigorous Indian administration at home.—I remain, Sir, yours most faithfully,

London, Feb. 1, 1872.

OUR LAWS FOR INDIA.—II.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Now, as fond fathers,
Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch,
Only to stick it in their childrens' sight
For terror, not to use, in time the rod Becomes more mocked, than feared; so our decrees Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,
And liberty plucks justice by the nose;
The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart Goes all decorum.—Measure for Measure.

SIR,—It is well that Englishmen should learn a little humility by calling to mind that forty-seven years ago, or more than twenty years after the Code Napoleon had become law, our bloody and vindictive English Penal Code made no less than 160 offences punishable with death.

Although the Indian Penal Code is not so bloodthirsty, it authorises magistrates and judges to inflict punishments of disproportionate severity; but the wisdom and prudence of those officers greatly mitigate many of the cruel provisions of the law, and when magistrates are misguided by the latter, the Courts of Appeal reduce the punishments. Again, what the Code calls rigorous imprisonment is scarcely ever enforced by our prison discipline. The convicts are taught various trades—how to print, how to manufacture paper, gunny bags, cloth, carpets, &c., &c. They are well-fed, comfortably housed, and have excellent medical care; some of their fellow-convicts are told off to cook for them, to clean their rooms, and to draw water for them from the wells. If they have committed very heinous felonies and are transported, they find in the Andaman Islands every opportunity of turning over a new leaf. One felon, transported for seven years, returned with a gold ornament round his neck, and told his neighbours that he and others could make wealth in the Andamans, and were allowed to marry, and that many women convicts sought his hand. Perhaps we may some day see an edifying history of society in the Andamans.

While, therefore, to magistrates and judges the punishments prescribed by the Penal Code often appear to be Draconic, many natives complain that they are not in practice deterrent. Our new friend, the Ataligh Ghazee, in Eastern Turkistan, appears to be in some ways an imitator of Chinghiz Khan, and Asiatics are apt to cry out for heavier punishments on thieves than our magistrates like to impose. The Nepalese scorn our ineffectual punishments. One of the members of the Durbar at Katmandhoo raised a general laugh by detailing in a naive manner our tender treatment of felons.

I believe that few magistrates or judges have ever attempted to enforce Section 373 of the Penal Code, which severely punishes the hiring of minors for immoral purposes. The authorities in one province were compelled to prohibit the police from taking cognisance of the offences to which that section refers, so impossible was it found to prevent extortion by the police, as long as so powerful an instrument of exaction was entrusted to them. Were this section to be extended to London, it would greatly purify the Metropolis. It would sweep into jails thousands of the frequenters and keepers of disorderly houses, multitudes of rich gentlemen, as well as decayed harlots.

With what inimitable satire does Shakespeare picture the ungovernable greed of lust, which refuses to acknowledge the existence of corruption beneath fine dresses:—

She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

How many, like the poor Transylvanian, court syphilis, and invite a horrible death.

As an instance of misdirected penal legislation, I would refer to the proposed Act for enforcing uniform weights and measures, which it is said has been vetoed by the authorities at home. You would enlighten your readers if you would give them a precis of the information supplied by the provinces on which this Act was founded.

The effect of our legislation to secure rights in property by the action of Civil Courts must be discussed in another letter.

T.

MR. STOCQUELER AND MR. MACAULAY.

SIR,—Your correspondent "T." in his letter on "Our Laws for India," adduces, as an instance of the way in which Macaulay "went to work" in the preparation of the Penal Code, a case of "trespass" on my part.

It is unfortunate for "T." that, presuming he speaks at second hand, he has been so entirely misled. The "curious illustration" is from beginning to end a ridiculous fabrication. I never was at more than one review at Dum-Dum in ten years, and then I went on horseback, and never dismounted. I never "got on the top" of any man's carriage in my life. If I had perpetrated so gross a piece of rudeness in the case of Mr. Macaulay, of course I should not have refused to dismount on being required to do so by the owner. And of this I am quite sure—that if I had ascended Mr. Macaulay's vehicle, the footing on which I stood with that gentleman would have precluded his ordering me to dismount, equally with my refusal to meet his orders. The whole thing is an absurd invention.—Yours, &c.,

J. H. STOCQUELER.

London, Feb. 3.

P.S.—I should not have deemed the story worth contradiction but for the corollary in regard to the Penal Code.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE MOHAMMED KHEYLS.

The Pioneer asks what was the reason for the revolt of the Kheyls, the abandonment of their fertile lands on the Kuram river, their flight to the mountains, their attack on the British outpost, and their long continued hostilities? The reason, if we may believe his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, was the difficulty experienced by local officials in learning Pushtu! His Honour has put it on record that he believes that the Mohammed Kheyls would never have abandoned their lands or attacked the British detachment had the officers of the district been acquainted with the language spoken by the Waziris, and able to understand their grievances without the intervention of untrustworthy native officials. There is no doubt, says his Honour, that many of the grievances complained of were real, and that the harsh and oppressive conduct of some of the native officers of the district helped to drive these proud Pathans into rebellion. When the Waziri Chiefs were called in from the hills to meet his Honour at Banu, in the spring of the present year, they spoke out frankly enough. "Every one," they said, "hates the Waziris. The crimes of others are attributed to us. The British officers listen to what is told them by their munshis, and never to us. Every peon with a badge is our master." "The Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor (so runs this minute) is aware that Pushtu is a language of some difficulty, and that there are few facilities for its study. But there are no such difficulties as to excuse officers who have long been stationed on the frontier from acquiring complete colloquial knowledge of Pushtu, and without such knowledge, without the power of freely conversing with the border tribes in their own vernacular, a district officer will always remain inefficient, and occurrences similar to the Mohammed Kheyl outbreak will always be possible." The acquisition of Pushtu within a reasonable time will therefore be considered obligatory on all civil officers posted to districts in which this language is the vernacular; and the Lieutenant-Governor has desired it to be understood that no qualifications will be held sufficient to entitle officers in the Commission to the charge of frontier districts unless they possess a competent colloquial knowledge of the language spoken by the frontier tribes. And thus from evil cometh good!

ARCHDEACON PRATT.

The Englishman has no inclination to regard, in a spirit of criticism, the proceedings of a meeting animated by such a purpose as that which assembled at the Bishop's Palace to do honour to the memory of Archdeacon Pratt; but it fears that some of its readers who knew that good and really great man, his character and works, will feel something akin to disappointment at the mere allusions with which his labour in the cause of Science were discussed by the speakers, labours which had justly earned for him a world-wide reputation for genius and success in elucidating some of the most difficult problems in physical research that have occupied the mathematicians of his day. To those who are acquainted with his work in this direction it is needless to do more than to refer to his original investigation of the influence of the Himalayan mountain mass in causing local deflections of the plumb-line over the continent of India, and to the singularly lucid exposition which he more recently gave of the method in which storm-waves are formed and move, at a time when practical results of vital moment to this metropolis were seen to depend on a right solution of the questions which arose after the great cyclone of 1864. To the members of the Asiatic Society there can be no more pleasing recollection than that of the easy genial manner in which the late Archdeacon conveyed instruction and removed difficulties out of the way of intellects less trained than his own—a matter so full of simplicity that it was scarcely possible to believe that the facts made clear by him in a few words to the humblest comprehension were often the issue of profound scientific enquiry, which few men even of the present day would have had courage to attempt. In the scientific branches of the public service the name of Archdeacon Pratt will for generations to come be closely associated with the highest successes that have been accomplished, for it is not too much to say that, when questions of unusual difficulty have arisen, it has been an established practice to refer them for his assistance, and that, until he has spoken, no great scientific discussion has been considered complete.

EUROPEAN BRITISH SUBJECTS AND THE LAW.

The Englishman holds that the writ of habeas corpus is valued by Englishmen not more for its intrinsic worth than for its traditional prestige. It is the "Civis Romanus sum," which he is proud to carry with him to the utmost limit of a remote dependency. Dear to him, from historical grounds at home, it is doubly dear in India, where it becomes the distinctive characteristic of the conquering race. It is mere hypocrisy to ignore our real position here as having conquered the country in war, and now holding it by force of arms. Immodest as it sounds to say so, we are the superior race; we feel it; we wish the natives to feel it; and while we provide for them an administration of justice as pure, thorough, and merciful as any in the world, we are not prepared, for the sake of putting ourselves on an exact level with them, to divest ourselves of an ancient right, which for centuries our race has regarded with an almost reverential affection. Such, we presume, stated in the plainest terms, are the sentiments of most Englishmen on the subject. To what conclusions do they naturally lead? In the first place, the new Code should provide in unmistakable terms that in all parts of India some High Court or other should be bound, on reasonable cause being shown, to issue a writ to bring up the person of any European British prisoner, and to decide upon the legality of his imprisonment. Express provision should be made, in the case of territories not subject to any of the High Courts, for the issue of a writ from some one of them, whenever occasion arose. Englishmen will then, in every nook and corner of the Empire, be perfectly safe from being irregularly or illegally confined. With this precaution the criminal jurisdiction of the Justices of the Peace over European British subjects might, it appears to us, in the second place, be considerably enlarged, without the slightest risk to personal security, or the slightest diminution of prestige. In no case, of course, should any one but a European Justice of the Peace be able to pass sentence on an Englishman; but we see no sort of reason in restricting the powers of such an officer to the one or two petty offences with which under an old Act of Geo. III. he is at present competent to deal. Supposing, for instance, that he had the same powers to deal with European British subjects as with natives in respect of cases which he is competent to try; but that, when he committed, the committal should be to the High Court, to which an appeal should also lie in every case. Would any one be less safe, would the national prestige be endangered, because a Justice of the Peace could pass a couple of years' imprisonment on some loafing scoundrel, who has been living probably for months on the fruits of fraud and violence, imposing on chaplains, frightening ladies, thrashing villagers, the very scourge of the terrified Hindu's existence, the scandal of English administration?

POST OFFICE.—It is rumoured that Mr. A. M. Monteath, Director-General of the Post-office, is likely soon to return to India. In that case Mr. F. R. Hogg, the officiating Director-General, will probably be Postmaster-General of Bengal, the salary of the Deputy Director-General having been now reduced to Rs. 1,500, progressively rising to Rs. 1,700 per mensem. Mr. H. A. Brown, the Officiating Deputy Director-General, will revert to his former post as Compiler of Postal Accounts and Personal Assistant to the Director-General, and Mr. Tweedie, the Officiating Postmaster-General, will be Deputy Director-General.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

CAMP TIPAI MUKH, New Year's Day.—The first act of the Loshai drama has just closed, as news has come in of the submission of the Kholell men. On the 30th ultimo General Bouchier, with 150 men of the 42nd N.I., started at nine A.M. for the burnt villages, accompanied by a survey party under Captain Badgley. This move was intended more as a demonstration to show the savages that the return of the force to the camp on the Towee Boom was not the result of any opposition on their part to our onward progress, but that we were both able and ready to move in any direction we pleased. The enemy had been hovering about the camp, stalking our sentries and annoying the force, and one man had been wounded. About three miles from the camp, a Loshai, clad in a yellow cloak with a tall bunch of feathers on his head, appeared in the path, evidently anxious for a parley. He turned out to be one of Poyboy's emissaries, and came on the part of his chief and the Kholell men to sue for peace. On understanding that he would not be molested, he ascended a tree, and waving a red cloth yelled in a most unearthly manner to his brethren in the jungle to cease firing and come in. Gradually from behind bush and tree, skulking along from ridge to ridge, savage after savage dropped in, till a goodly number were collected, including one woman and child; the first we had seen. Where they all came from was a wonder, as they rose out of the ground from all sides. The firing ceased at once. The Kholell men stated that they had lost severely both in men and property, and that the destruction of their granaries would utterly ruin them, as they depended entirely on their store of grain for the coming year's subsistence. Whether this was absolutely true or merely a ruse to gain time and bury their remaining stacks of corn is of course not known. They were informed that our terms would be stated to them hereafter. In the meanwhile a truce or armistice was concluded. When questioned about their losses, they acknowledged a loss of five men killed, but would give no information about the number wounded. The pious zeal which these people display in removing their killed and wounded comrades is really astonishing, as notwithstanding the nearly incessant firing of the last few days only one Loshai corpse has been brought in, greatly to the disappointment of one at least of our medical officers, who is anxious to get some Loshai skulls to decorate an ethnological museum at home. The Loshais cut off our heads as warlike trophies whilst we decapitate them in the interests of science—which are the savages? Having treated the enemy to the fortiter in re, the suaviter in modo has been tried with those who have come in, and firewater has been lavished on them, in the hope of getting some pilots and scouts to assist in ferreting out those of their brethren who are not yet converted to a true belief in Enfields and rifled guns. It is hoped that we shall succeed in getting guides. These men ought to prove of great assistance, as our weak point up to the present has been the difficulty in obtaining trustworthy scouts. Had the intelligence department been properly managed, we should have had timely notice at Tipai Mukh of the intended raid of the 26th ultimo, and should not have to deplore the death of some of our mahouts and the loss of two elephants. I am happy to be able to state that two more of the runaways have been captured after a weary hunt over two or three ranges of hills. There are now only two elephants still unaccounted for.

The Loshais who came into Camp seem never weary of admiring the rifles and arms of our sepoy, but the red coats seemed to excite their great admiration. But for the moral effect produced on the savage mind by a mass of scarlet, it would seem to be the worst possible dress in which to clothe men for work in a country covered with forest and jungle. Whilst the green-coated Goorka lies hidden in bush, almost as invisible as the savage himself, the red clad Punjaba stands up in his gorgeous panoply, a mark which none but a Loshai musket could possibly miss. These weapons are in truth wondrous pieces of mechanism. The barrel is attached to the stock by means of lac, further strengthened by a tie of cane. One of these old flint muskets had on it the Tower mark with the date 1745—from Culloden to Kholell, rather a long step!

We unfortunates at Tipai Mukh have been amusing ourselves lately in throwing up defensive works, and the position is now strong enough to resist any force that the Loshais could possibly bring against us. The hill to the south has been cleared, and a small stockaded post for a picquet constructed on the top, connected by a breastwork with the picquet below, and further strengthened by traverses affording a flanking fire. The hill commands a view of the whole Camp, with a good look-out on three sides, up the Tipai one way and up and down the Barak. A further method of defence has been borrowed from our enemies, viz., pangees, or pointed bamboo spikes, driven into the ground and covered with a little loose earth. The Goorkhas of the 44th are great adepts in this style of fortification, having had much experience of it in the Khassia Hills and the Bhootan Campaign. These little obstacles are much more formidable than one would think, as the bamboos are sharp enough to run through the stoutest boot, and a rush through them by bare-footed men would be simply impossible. We have had one or two accidents lately from falling timber. The recklessness of natives in felling trees on a hill-side is simply wonderful; they never seem to think it necessary to warn those underneath, but appear to consider it rather a laudable feat than otherwise to drop a tree neatly on a comrade below.

The hospital is pretty full at present; there appears to be a great prevalence of dysentery and bowel complaints amongst both officers and men. Eleven wounded men are expected in from the front to-day, so that the medical officer in charge of the depot hospital will find his hands pretty full. Five hundred of Hidayut Ali's coolies under Major Moore ought to arrive within a day or two; if they have quite recovered they will be of great use, as we cannot have too much carriage to push on commissariat stores to the front. The remnant of the 22nd who were left behind at Mynadur ought soon to be up. They are much wanted, as the men here are on duty almost incessantly night and day, and the constant work is commencing to tell upon them.—Pioneer Correspondent.

STATION TALK.

DELHI, Jan. 8.—It is a remarkable decree of what some people would call fate, that, if two events of importance are occurring, I invariably desire to be at the wrong one, and in the end find myself rightly placed—where I did not want to go. Thus in 1869 every one said, "Stay for the Duke of Edinburgh's visit and the Grand Durbar," but the doctors would not have it, and I found myself in for the Suez Canal fêtes, undoubtedly the more important event of the two; and now, again, my wish was to accompany the Loshai expedition, but it was not to be; and, instead, I find myself at the Delhi Camp of Exercise, and again feel inclined to agree that the fates have dealt well with me. There is no doubt that the Camp would be something to miss, and I am afraid that, in one direction or another, there will be many similar expeditions to that in Loshai; and, though I hope there will be many Camps too, yet this is the first one, and probably the largest which will be assembled for some years to come. Having noticed the Suez Canal fetes, what a very different life is this to what we had in those days, just two years ago! Instead of the luxury and splendour provided by H. H. the Khedive, here we are reduced to forty pounds of baggage, and yet I am happy, and don't know after all that I would exchange the one for the other. The fact is, something of this sort was wanted to keep the Army up to fighting pitch, and show the natives that we are as ready as ever to keep the country, and, if it costs a little money, to do so well. The public may rest well assured that it is well spent, and will save many pounds hereafter. The Army wants it, too, as you would well believe, could you see some of the regiments here—useless officers, useless horses, useless men—and only something of this sort would bring them to the front, and lead to that thorough break-down which appears necessary to remedy the bad state of things. None of the three Generals are likely to pass over anything, and, if they did, Lord Napier of Magdala would very soon find them out, for he is everywhere, always in the saddle, riding about somewhere amongst the three Divisions. On Saturday the games and assault of arms took place, and a remarkably pretty picture it made with all the native chiefs and officers, from almost every regiment in Bengal, assembled under shemianas erected for the purpose. Tent-pegging, lance against sword, and the usual trials of arms followed one upon the other. The Adjutant, Sergeant-Major, and men of the 11th (Prince Consort's Own Hussars) were facile principes all round, and are evidently determined that the corps shall lose none of its celebrity in India. Their Colonel was one of the leading umpires, and everything went off well. By the way, I hear that Mr. Scindiah got a snub, which I trust will do him good. Having an engagement with Lord Napier for eleven o'clock he failed to put in an appearance, and, apart from the discourtesy of the act, every moment of the Commander-in-Chief's time is allotted somewhere or other. The result was when he did come the durwaza was bound, and I hope this very well-won punishment will not be lost on one of the, if not the, leading native chief in India. It is rather too bad to lose regiment after regiment at Morar, because Scindiah is allowed to indulge in his whim of soldiering, and then to receive a want of courtesy to no less a personage than the Commander-in-Chief. The Gwalior force might very easily be disbanded, and what would Scindiah be worth then? So take care, Mr. Scindiah, and don't be late next time. Yesterday the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab arrived, but, except amongst his own officials, did not create much disturbance. To-day was the day of the fair. Lord Mayo arrived at a very early hour this morning; in fact, so early, that I don't think he was unearched from the carriage till some time after arrival. However that may be, the Second and Third Divisions, which had moved in from their camp, to be near at hand, paraded at an early hour, and, together with the First Division, were ready for inspection about 10 A.M. They were drawn up in three lines; first came the Infantry, brigaded in columns of double companies, the Artillery were in a second line, and the Cavalry in the third. Shortly before eleven o'clock, officers and colours were brought to the front of the Infantry columns, and it soon spread along the line that the Viceroy was coming. Immediately after this the Battery on the right began to boom out a royal salute, and everybody came to attention. Opposite the troops had come out from Delhi every one who could come—carriages, horses, elephants, camels, were there in crowds, and the scene was perfect. The ground chosen, I should have told you, was that opposite Budlee ka Serai, on the other side of the road, and an excellent plain it is for the purpose, and a suitable reminder to the inhabitants of Delhi of some former doings in the same neighbourhood. But here comes the procession along the line. First aide-de-camp and quartermasters-general, and his lordship of Magdala, surrounded by a large staff and numerous visitors from England and elsewhere. Then Lord Mayo, riding in an outer line, accompanied by the general of the division being passed, and a single aide-de-camp. And after an interval came on the inner line, native chiefs and orderlies and pageantry in numbers. Passing down the front of the infantry, back again down the front of the artillery, and then turning back again, if you can understand, down the front of the cavalry. His lordship had finished that part of the programme, and the whole procession galloped off to the flag-staff to see the whole of the force march past. The First Division then sent its cavalry and artillery at a walk march-past, and its infantry followed; next came the Second Division in the same order; and, finally, the troops of the Third Division. All did so well that it is impossible to say which Division showed to the most advantage; but perhaps the Second might be, on the whole, considered the best for Infantry, the Third for Cavalry, and the First for Artillery. This enormous force was very rapidly moved past in double companies, and not a single hitch checked its uniform advance. And it was as well, for other matters remained. The Cavalry and Artillery were then divided into two forces, and some sham fighting went on in General Tombs' best style. A great deal of galloping, a good deal of firing, aides-de-camp and gallopers flying in all directions, and every one in a high state of excitement. This went on till about three o'clock, and, speaking for the horses, I may say they were tolerably well tired of it by the time they got to quarters. For the rest there is a levee to-night at the Delhi Institute, at which all officers are to attend for presentation to Lord Mayo, and afterwards a ball both in working or undress uniform, so as not to interrupt the occupation of the camp. On Tuesday the Second Division will take up a position near the ridge, close by, on which they will be forced, probably by the attacks of the Second and Third Division, who will move forward from their positions on Wednesday. The Viceroy will, I believe, himself first inspect the picquets of both sides, and the position of each force respectively. Afterwards the battle will rage continuously for some twenty-four hours, and much agony from cold and hunger be endured, no doubt; but, Sir, I trust we are not piecrust, and have not forgotten how to behave in war, or to show ourselves ready, if the occasion should present itself, to forget our personal comforts for the good of the country. After that tall sentiment, I must conclude for the present, and assure you we are all very jolly. The camp will probably break up on the 21st instant.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

BANKS.—The Bank of Bengal has declared a dividend for the past half-year at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and the Bank of Madras at 5 per cent. per annum.

MR. P. KENNEDY.—The Bengal papers state "on authority" that there is no truth in the report that Mr. Pitt-Kennedy has been appointed a Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

THE CROPS IN OUDH.—The prospects for the rubber crop throughout the province of Oudh are favourable. The rain which fell on the 22nd and 23rd December was general, and is said to have done much good.

HILLS NORTH OF DEYRAH.—The severity of the season is driving game and wild animals right into the station. Bears and leopards are met with almost every night, and a woodcock was shot the other morning close to the Himalaya Hotel.—Delhi Gazette.

THE LATE ARCHDEACON PRATT.—A meeting has been held in Calcutta at which it was resolved to raise funds for a memorial in commemoration of Archdeacon Pratt. The memorial will likely take the form of a girls' school, at which a certain number of pupils shall be taught free.

THE PEACE OF THE FRONTIER.—To secure the peace of the northern and north-western skirts of the Punjab the Government of India has decided, among other stringent measures, that no building shall be erected within five miles of the British frontier without sanction.

BABU SHAMA CHARN DEY.—It is said that the Finance Minister has telegraphed to the Secretary of State for India, stating that Babu Shama Charn Dey, named for deputation to England, will be unable to undertake the voyage, in consequence of the advice of his medical attendants.

RAILWAYS.—It is rumoured in Calcutta that the office establishment of the Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways, North-Western Provinces, has been, or is shortly to be, transferred to the Public Works Secretariat of the Government of India. It is stated that reductions are again impending on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway in the construction department, affecting a large number of employes of every description.

CINCHONA AT DARJEELING.—The Darjeeling Cinchona Association has, says the Darjeeling News, according to its statement for 31st December, 1871, 13,20,858 plants in permanent plantation, 3,03,000 in nurseries, and 6,802 as stock plants, or in propagating frame—making a grand total of 16,30,667 plants.

THE LEPCHAS AND THE BHOOTEAS.—The Darjeeling News thus discriminates between the Lepchas and the Bhooteas. The Lepchas, it says, are a fair and beardless race, Mongolians, Buddhists, omnivorous, amiable and cheerful. The Bhooteas are a fair and bearded race, Mongolians, Buddhists, omnivorous, quarrelsome, and heavy.

IMPUDENT MONKEYS.—The monkeys at Shajeehanpore have, according to a native contemporary, reached such a pitch of impudence that one of them has assaulted and dreadfully wounded a Mahomedan. The native paper goes on to say, that unless steps are soon taken for their destruction, they will increase to an alarming extent, when it will be extremely difficult to get rid of them.

RUSSIAN EXPEDITION AGAINST THE KHIVANS.—The Lahore Journal announces, on the authority of a letter from Balkh, that a small Russian expedition had reached Orgundj and attacked the Khiva troops. After slaughtering a large number, the Russians retired. The Khivans have collected great forces, and are preparing to defend themselves against further attacks.

COLLECTOR'S CAMPS.—The Indian Daily News thinks that the camps of travelling collectors in Bengal are unnecessarily large, and that a collector's visit usually results in a heavy fine on the places honoured thereby; and believes that both these evils would be removed if collectors left all office work behind them, and travelled about their districts with a single tent, and one or two attendants.

PANIC AT LUCKNOW.—The Karnamah states that the alarm was so great at Lucknow during the time the cholera was raging there that many of the natives quitted the city; others "lost all peace of mind, and their complexions turned pale with fright." In one case a native gentleman on seeing from his balcony a bier pass by was seized with fever. According to this paper the deaths from cholera from the 11th to 17th November amounted to 81.

THE WINE-MAKING MISSIONARY.—We hear that the Rev. Mr. Varnier, of Patna, whose name has frequently appeared lately in the journals in connection with experiments in producing wines and brandies from the jamun and other fruits, has been removed from the roll of missionaries of the S. P. G. The ground of this measure is, we presume, that his secular experiments were supposed to be prosecuted to the injury of his missionary duties.—Pioneer.

KHAJEH ABDUL GANI.—The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has, we learn from the local paper, requested the Commissioner of Dacca to convey to Khajeh Abdul Gani, C.S.I., an expression of his Honour's appreciation of his liberality and loyal feeling in presenting Rs. 50,000 for the permanent improvement of the town of Dacca. A few native gentlemen are to be associated with the officials on the Committee to be appointed to decide as to the outlay of the money.

AMEER KHAN'S ESTATE.—We learn that a judgment-creditor of Ameer Khan seized a large portion of the property before his final conviction, and on Tuesday applied to have the same sold. The application was opposed by the Government, and Mr. Justice Phear, deciding that the forfeiture of Ameer Khan's property to the Government was an absolute forfeiture ab initio, the application must be dismissed. The Advocate General applied for and obtained an order for costs against the applicant.—Indian Daily News.

THE MAYO COLLEGE.—A correspondent in Rajpootana of the Delhi Gazette writes:—"The Mayo College is not to be in the Grecian style after all. Just as the engineer expected to receive orders to commence work, the whole idea has changed, and an engineer deputed to travel over the country in order to study Hindu architecture, and compound a design from what he sees. Lucky fellow, there will be salary, tentage, travelling allowance, and a nice cold weather run! By the way, what is the reason that the Rajpootana P.W.D. has nothing to do with this undertaking? It has had a good deal of experience of various kinds of architecture of late years in connection with the Nusseerabad barracks. Perhaps the famine works occupy all its skill and attention."

OPIMUM.—A letter in the correspondence columns of our Alighurh contemporary informs us that some of the officers of the Opium Department in the districts of Allahabad, Futtehpur, and Banda, "are trying with their heart and soul to extend the cultivation of opium, and that they are gradually gaining success by microscopically representing the profits to ryots and not seldom by force." If this extension be approved by Government, the writer entertains "very little doubt that in a very short period all the best and most fertile fields of the North-Western Provinces will be engrossed by the venom, as has already been done by indigo in Behar." The letter concludes with a respectful request "for Government to make some timely restriction, or assign some proper limits to its cultivation."

THE UMPIRE STAFF AT DELHI.—A correspondent of the Mofussilite says—It may be interesting to some of your readers to glance over the official list of the Umpire Staff, who may be called upon as Officers possessed of high professional acquirements to decide upon important points and principles of strategy in the coming General operations. Commander-in-Chief.—Umpire-in-Chief, Major-General

Huyshé, R.A., Inspector-General, R.A.; Colonel Hon. F. Thesiger, Adjutant-General; Colonel M. A. Biddulph, Director-General, R.A., in India; Colonel G. V. Johnson, R.A.; Colonel M. Dillon, C.B., C.S.I.; Colonel C. G. Arbuthnot, C.B., R.H.A.; Colonel T. Wright, C.B.; Colonel P. S. Lumsden, C.S.I.; Colonel E. Atlay, C.B., R.H.A.; Colonel C. Creagh Osborne, C.B.; Major D. Mac Farlan, R.H.A.; Captain F. G. Ravenhill, R.H.A.; Captain J. Creagh, 5th Fusiliers; Captain R. N. Gream, Dr. of Gymnastics; Captain P. F. G. Galloway, R.A.

CRUELITIES OF POLICE IN EXTORTING A CONFESSION.—At Mynpoory the Officiating Sessions Judge has just sentenced three native policemen, one a sub-inspector, to various terms of imprisonment, for extorting confession of a crime. The modus operandi was as follows:—The suspected individual was tied by the arms to a neem tree, and beaten with shoes by the accused. They then unloosed him, laid him on the ground, and set a charpoy over him with the leg on his chest. One man sat on the charpoy and the others pulled the victim's moustache until one side came clean off. Other two men were also maltreated though not so severely as the first. It is noteworthy that the assessors, the native gentlemen whom our wonderful laws thrust into the strange position of being jurymen without power to guide the judge, were of opinion that there had been some excess of authority, but that it was merely through the inexperience of the sub-inspector. These assessors should be made "native magistrates."—Indian Public Opinion.

ENGLISH SETTLERS ON THE HIMALAYAS.—A newsletter from Kumaon, in the Delhi Gazette, says:—Your articles on the colonisation of these hills seems to be drawing attention to the matter of sheep and cattle breeding; here the field is great, and a judicious combination of farm, with a tea garden, if the necessary capital and skill were forthcoming, would probably be found a profitable speculation, for the cattle and sheep farm would feed tea-bushes. This province has its drawback of course in the unfortunate composition of part of its social element, but that cannot, it is to be hoped, be everlasting, and even as it is, capital is ready to make the attempt. Land at three shillings and nine pence an acre, abounding with sweet natural grass for pasture, offers advantages combined with a magnificent climate which few countries have it in their power to offer, and yet with all these advantages if practical skill be not combined with the capital failure must, and will, result, as has been demonstrated in these hills, where wool-growing has only resulted in finger-burning; and you have done well in warning possessors of capital to see that they are likewise possessors of knowledge before investing in land.

MILITARY.—We hear from Vizag, that three detachments of the 33rd Regiment have embarked at Bimley for Calcutta, en route to Dorundah. The fourth detachment is still at Vizianagram and two companies of the 2nd Regiment from Waltair, under Lieutenant-Colonel Jenkins, have proceeded to Vizianagram to relieve the last detachment of the 33rd Regiment. The first detachment of the 12th is expected to land at Bimley on the 26th inst., and will proceed to Vizianagram. There has been a total failure of both S.W. and N.E. monsoons this year at Waltair. Not a shower of rain to speak of for the last three months. Rice is becoming very dear, and at one time the grain dealers were closing their rice godowns and would not sell. The sepoys began to growl, especially when they observed no rice coming into the town from the district, and that the supplies landed at Vizag from Coconada and Gopulpore were brought up and sent into the district where rice is more scarce, and sold at a higher rate.—Madras Times.—We hear that the 2nd Regiment N.I., under command of Colonel Oakes, now stationed at Julpigoree, have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness, probably with a view to sending them to the Eastern Frontier in case more troops are required there.—Indian Daily News.—From Darjeeling we learn that the 4-24th Battery, Royal Artillery, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Meade, was to have left that sanitarium on New Year's-day for Gwalior. During the two years the battery remained in Darjeeling only one man died, and he is said to have arrived there in bad health.

THE FEVER IN BURDWAN.—A Burdwan letter in the Calcutta Englishman says:—During the last three years the epidemic fever has made the most dreadful ravages here, depopulating entire villages; but now the scenes which we poor folks are called on to witness are something most heartrending and surprising. Poor people, when suddenly attacked, are seen dying off in the streets without a soul to assist them or give them a drop of anything in the shape of medicine. I have repeatedly seen people lying in the streets, sometimes devoured by dogs and jackals, sometimes exposed to the passers-by in a state of nudity. These unfortunate victims of the epidemic may sometimes be seen alive, sometimes in the last gasp of death; but who is nigh to help them? Not a single soul. The police do not care, because these poor wretches have committed no offence, and the authorities of course know nothing of such things. Hence no one cares to look to those who are dying or require help. I will give you one instance, which I, to my deep regret, had to witness yesterday evening as I was going home. A boy, about eighteen, was seen by me and several others with me on the point of death, lying beside the road adjoining the Rajbari, and leading to Borehat, in a perfect state of nudity. I with others with me, cried out to the constables to take the boy to the Government Hospital for immediate aid, but not a constable was to be seen anywhere. I wanted to get a conveyance, but no one, I was told, would touch one dying, of whom he knew nothing, or whose caste was unknown. I was therefore, to my extreme regret, compelled to leave the poor boy dying on the roadside. The police to the last never interfered, nor was there anyone to do anything for the poor lad. All night he lay exposed to the chill dews of heaven, and I am told, died in the morning, and lay in that state till two o'clock in the day, when a municipal dead-cart carried away his lifeless body to be devoured by jackals and vultures near a stream, a few miles off from the town. It is only surprising that dogs and jackals did not eat up the body before life was extinct, as was the case on one occasion, I am told.

THE SUICIDE OF A MERCHANT AT CALCUTTA.—At Calcutta, on the 30th ult., Mr. Charles Miller, coroner, held an inquest on the body of Mr. D. Folkard, merchant, who committed suicide on the 28th by shooting himself with a revolver. Among the witnesses was Charles Palmer, who said,—"I am a member of the firm of Cutler, Palmer and Co., wine merchants, carrying on business in London and Bordeaux. I knew the deceased, Mr. Folkard. He had had business transactions with our house. He was not connected with our house, but was only a customer of ours. For the last year his business transactions had not been very satisfactory. He had not been able to meet his acceptances. That induced me to come out here with Mr. Treacher. Mr. Folkard had obtained lodgings for us opposite to where he was living. I found, on going over his accounts, that they were satisfactory, so much so that I agreed to establish my business here, and promised to give him the management of it. For that purpose he called on me that morning at half-past nine. He said that he would go to the office first, and I was to follow him, as it was too early for me then. He appeared very cheerful. I followed him in about an hour, and met the sircar, Issenchunder Boss, at the entrance of his office. He told me that Mr. Folkard had shot himself. I went upstairs, and saw the body on the floor, and went off immediately to the police-office. Finding the coroner on the way, I turned my carriage back, and drove back to the office. Before I left, I found his leg (I believe his right leg) drawn up. During the interval I was absent, and when I returned I found that both the legs had been stretched out. The pistol appeared to be in the same position as when I saw it first. I do not think at all that Mr. Folkard's affairs were in a desperate condition. He had only two creditors; they were ourselves and his brother-in-law. His estate was sufficient to cover his liabilities. I can't account for his destroying himself, except receiving no letters from his wife by the last mail, which circumstance might have distressed his mind. If he had been in difficulties, we could have assisted him. He was an exceedingly temperate man. I saw nothing in his manner to lead me to suppose that he was in low spirits. After hearing medical and other evidence, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver.—Englishman, Jan. 1.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Jan. 12.—Jute: Prices are firm, but we cannot report any actual rise; stocks are large. Saltpetre has been in good demand, and prices have an upward tendency. Rice: The high prices asked by holders have stopped shipments to Europe, though there are still ships loading for the outports. Linnseed: Prices continue firm, especially as the last season's crop is rapidly coming to an end. Raw Silk: But one sale of 15 bales inferior Comerecolly is reported at from Rs. 11-8 to 12-8. The rainy band outturn is very short, and growers are asking prices above the rates ruling in London, so no business has been done.

THE NEW RAILWAY STATION AT MADRAS.—It is reported that Earl Mayo has been asked to open the new Railway Central Station near the General Hospital, and that the Viceroy has consented to do so.

MILITARY.—We hear that Lord Napier has issued instructions directing the Royal Artillery Hospital at Cannanore to be closed, and the establishment discharged, from the date of the removal from the station of the E Battery 20th Brigade Royal Artillery. The Artillery sick in future are to be treated in the hospital of the European Infantry Regiment stationed at the same cantonment. If we mistake not this is the fourth regimental hospital that has been closed during the last twelve months.—Madras Times.

A RUMOURED SUCCESSOR TO MR. STRACHEY.—A piece of local gup just now prevalent is that one of our members of Council, namely, the Hon. A. J. Arbuthnot, is likely shortly to be called upon to proceed to Calcutta to fill up a vacancy in the Executive Council of the Governor-General, which is expected shortly to take place, in consequence of the Hon. Mr. Strachey proceeding to England on furlough. We congratulate Mr. Arbuthnot, should his services be required in Calcutta, on the opportunity which will thus be afforded him of displaying his abilities in the more extended field of the Council of the Governor-General. We also congratulate our local secretary, Mr. Ellis, on the opportunity which will be afforded him, in the event of these arrangements taking place, of stepping from the secretariat chair to a seat as a member of Council.—Athenaeum.

STATE RAILWAYS.—A proposal has, we understand, been laid before the Government of his Highness the Nizam of Haidarabad for the construction of two new lines of railway, one of 277 miles from Haidarabad to Chanda, and the other, of 178 miles, from Warrangal to Masulipatam. Should this proposal be acceded to by the Nizam, it is, we believe, probable that a branch from Bezvara to Coconada will be constructed either by the Government as a State railway, or by a company under Government guarantee. Capitalists in England are, we understand, prepared to undertake the construction of the first-named two lines, on the Nizam granting a guarantee. The line between Haidarabad and Chanda would traverse a thickly-peopled country, and connect two important centres of trade, and should a short extension be constructed by the British Government from Chanda to Amraoti, Haidarabad would be placed in direct communication with the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab. The line from Haidarabad towards Bezvara would, supposing the proposed extension by Government to the coast to be carried out, connect the former place with the sea, and open up a market for the coal, timber, and other valuable products of the Nizam's territories. We believe that the Government of India has it in contemplation to place Madras and Calcutta in direct railway communication at no very distant date; and should the lines under notice be carried out, this connection would be effected much less expensively by a direct line from Calcutta to Nagpur, uniting the above system with the former, and another from the point at which it touches the east coast, connecting it with the nearest point on the north-west line of Madras Railway than by a line along the east coast. Calcutta and Madras would thus be connected by railway through Nagpur, Haidarabad, Warangal, Berwara, and Arcotam or Nagiri; and though this route would not be so direct as a line by the east coast, it would present many advantages which the latter does not possess.—Engfishman.

GOLD LEAF AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE.—The Burmah Herald contains copy of a letter written by the Pakhan Menghee, at Mandalay, to a head Buddhist priest, residing at Rangoon, announcing the intention of the King to send down quantities of gold leaf in order to regild the old shrine. Hence the scaffolding remains intact, and will not be removed until the gilding-work is completed. The Phaya-ta-gahs, Kyong-ta-gahs, and all the charitable people of the lower country are exhorted to join in this great work of regilding the whole shrine, from the base up to the apex, in which the King will give ample assistance in the way of gold leaf. The last occasion of regilding the Dagon Pagoda was in the years 1855 and 1856, when the whole population contributed according to their several ability. The King of Burmah, the Queens, and members of the Burmese Government, contributed most handsomely. The Chief Commissioner of that period, General Sir Arthur Phayre, contributed a donation of five hundred rupees to this work of regilding the whole shrine, and when finished, the Pagoda had certainly a most handsome and glittering appearance, especially when seen from the deck of a steamer some ten or fifteen miles down the river. The fact of a Burman Prime Minister addressing a high Burmese priest in Rangoon in regard to a pagoda standing in British territory is noteworthy, and should show our authorities how meddlesome are these people when they have any reason or apparent reason for their interference. This keeps up the feeling of nationality, and of the expected return by the British Government of the province of Pegu back to the King of Burmah, which is now publicly talked about among many of our Burmese population. The vision is kept in full view of our own people, and do what we can, their minds must be unsettled, unless we can show the King that he is only dreaming over things which can never come to pass. We feel strong in our strength, but the Burmese also feel strong in the subtlety and craft of their own King and his Government. Sir Arthur Phayre and General Fytche knew the Burmese like a book, but it may be doubted whether the present chief has that exact or accurate knowledge of the Court and King which his two predecessors possessed. The gallant Sladen has been sacrificed out of a spirit of deference to a monarch who has done nothing but humbug us ever since he came into power in the year 1853. By unsettling the minds of our native population, he keeps alive desires and feelings which never can be realised.—Rangoon Times, Dec. 18,

A NATIVE ATHLETIC CLUB AT RAJCOOTE.—A club has been started at Rajcoote under the name of the Rajcoote Hindoo Club, with the object of practising the most popular English games, such as cricket, foot-ball, &c., and to revive native games.

PRESENTATION OF A MEDAL TO A PARSEE.—We observe that Mr. Hormusjee Ruttonjee, engineer, a resident of Aden, has been presented with a medal by Government, for his meritorious services in connection with the Abyssinian expedition.

THE QUEEN'S STATUE.—Every preparation, we observe, has been made for the purpose of unveiling her Majesty's statue, ordered out from England at the expense of the late Gaskwar of Baroda; but as far as we can ascertain, no date has been fixed for the public ceremony which is to attend it.

THE PERSIAN FAMINE.—On 6th Jan. twenty-five Persian Famess came from Bunder Abbas by the buggalow Nasser. When she started she had thirty-seven passengers on board, but twelve died during the voyage. The remainder were brought on shore and taken to the Chowpatty Dhurumshalla, where they were provided with clothes, &c.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—A meeting of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce and the public was held on Wednesday to condemn Government's delay in preparing a comprehensive scheme for a harbour and port trust for Bombay, and to protest against the matter being settled without the mercantile community being consulted.

PERSIAN RELIEF FUND.—A meeting of the Bombay Committee of the Persian Relief Fund was held on Thursday, Jan. 11. It was resolved to remit to Colonel Pelly Rs. 4,000 in copper coin for distribution at Bushire; to place Rs. 5,000 at his disposal for distribution at Shiraz; to place Rs. 5,000 at the disposal of the Hon. Mr. Alison for distribution at Teheran; and also that as much woollen cloths as possible should be sent to these places. The whole fund collected in Bombay amounts to Rs. 16,664.

ALLOWANCE TO THE RANEE OF THE DECEASED KHUNDERAO GASKWAR.—The Jam-i-Jamshed says:—"According to the custom prevalent at Baroda, a widow of a deceased Raja gets an allowance of Rs. 25,000 per annum. The Resident at Baroda, by consent of H.H. Mulharao, recommended to Government to give the Ranee of the late Khunderao Gaskwar a lac of rupees per annum; but as the Ranee has left Baroda contrary to the wishes of Maharaja Mulharao, she will only get the usual allowance.

THE PARSEE STUDENTS FOR THE CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION.—Another of the three Parsee students, Mr. Dorabjee Dhunibhoy Shroff, a student of the Elphinstone College, and a nephew of Judge Manockjee Cursetjee, appeared before John Connor, Esq., senior magistrate, and produced evidence with regard to his age, with a view of shortly proceeding to England to compete for her Majesty's Indian Civil Service examination. The young student is now in his eighteenth year.

A SAD DOWNFALL.—Archibald Gathorne Remington, formerly a captain in her Majesty's Bengal Army, was yesterday charged, at the instance of Mr. Inspector Sweeny, before Mr. Nana Morojee, with being a vagrant and wandering about without any visible means of subsistence. He was ordered to be sent to the Government workhouse, attached to the House of Correction. Remington said he would like to leave the country and go to England, and was quite willing in the meantime to go to the House of Correction.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 15.

TROOPS FOR ENGLAND BY THE "JUMNA."—H.M.'s troopship Jumna sailed from Bombay for England via the Suez Canal on Friday, January 12. She took the undermentioned officers and troops for Malta:—20 officers, 1 lady, 1 child, 20 time-expired men of the Bengal Presidency from the Deolalee Depot, 15 women, 34 children. As the Jumna has been ordered to convey troops from Malta to Gibraltar and back, the above-mentioned troops will, on arrival of the Jumna at Malta, be provided with passage on another transport by the general officer commanding at Malta.

MILITARY.—The C Battery 18th Brigade Royal Artillery arrived here on Sunday morning last from Belgium, and has been encamped at the Wanowrie lines under the command of Major Reid. We regret to hear that during their march they lost a child belonging to a sergeant of the battery two years old. It appears that at the encamping place on this side of Sattara the child happened to be missing, and search was made in every direction, when some of the parts of the body and the head of the unfortunate child were found in some desert place. From this it was supposed that the unfortunate boy must have been carried there and devoured by a hyæna. As however we are not in possession of the particulars we cannot state anything further, but have no doubt that this beast in his nightly prowls must have walked away with the unfortunate boy.—Poona Observer:—No. 1 Company Native Artillery, consisting of 2 European officers, 75 native commissioned and non-commissioned rank and file, 51 women, 50 children, with a number of followers, arrived at Bombay by train from Ahmedabad at 7 P.M. and are encamped in tents on the esplanade. They were to be embarked for Aden on board the Government steamer Dalhousie about the 20th January.

JUSTICE TO THE DEAD.—We take the following from the Times of India:—"Sir,—From your issue of the 29th Dec., I am glad to see the justice, though tardy, which Sir G. Le Grand Jacob has accorded to Chima Saheb, the unfortunate young Prince of Kolapoor, whom he apprehended on mere suspicion, and sent to Kurrachee at the time of the Mutiny. To my personal knowledge, very many of our Hindu subjects in Kolapoor and the Southern Marathi country have a very keen sense of the injustice which has been inflicted on the young Prince. General Jacob apprehended him on mere suspicion, as he now admits. There never has come to light the slightest evidence of his complicity with the mutineers, so far as I know. The reigning Prince, Shivaji, Chima's half-brother, was known to be so thoroughly loyal to our Government, that traitors had not the slightest hope of detaching him from his allegiance to us. What more natural than for disaffected spirits to clamour for Chimajee to let them place him at their head and change the dynasty that much? What more consonant with Indian antecedents, whether Chimajee were consenting or not? That he did consent, or even wink at their disaffection, there is not the slightest proof as before remarked. The arrest and removal from the scene of the mutiny on suspicion, at the time of such intense excitement and danger, may have been justifiable; but it was not needful, when the excitement and danger wholly passed away, to continue to hold him in durance, far from his home and friends, deprive him of the acknowledged right of succession on the death of his brother, and prolong his confinement till his death closed the scene. I am certainly glad to find General Jacob does not endorse this injustice, and I hope it will be long before our native princes and subjects will be able to quote another such instance to the discredit of our rule.—CHRISTMAS. Southern Marathi Country."

THE WATER SUPPLY OF BOMBAY.—On Thursday the quarterly meeting of the Bench of Justices was held in the Town Hall, when a somewhat important step was taken regarding our water supply. Anxiety has been felt at the depleted state of Vihar consequent upon the lightness of the monsoons in one or two years past, and the impurity that was showing itself as the quantity of water decreased was looked upon with disfavour by those who were interested in the question of public health. Mr. Walton, the Executive Engineer for the Municipality, prepared three projects, each simply to utilise the Toolsee Valley so as to increase the gathering grounds of Vihar by an addition of 1,477 acres. The principle features of the third scheme were a main dam seventy-four feet high and 485 long, with a channel and a second dam on the watershed 1,100 feet long and about twenty-one feet high. Mr. Walton estimated that this project would cost three and one-half lakhs. Mr. Ormiston, the Government Engineer for Reclamations, recommended this scheme with alterations which would raise the estimated cost to Rs. 500,000 but would make a valuable reserve supply to Bombay, while assisting to keep Vihar full. The principal suggestion of Mr. Ormiston was to provide an inlet tower for an independent main in case it should be required by any accident happening to the Vihar main; and it was explained that at any future time Toolsee could be made either an independent supply by the carrying off a main from it right on to Bombay, or, if it were thought necessary, the Toolsee water could be led into the present main somewhere between Coorla and Vihar. When the matter came before the Bench, Mr. Hope approved of Toolsee merely as a gathering ground for Vihar, and expressed his opinion that to make it an independent supply for Bombay would be a waste of money, because while it would give only four and a half gallons per head daily a larger scheme might be secured for Bombay at not much more than the same price; and he believed that the estimate for the utilisation of Toolsee in the way he approved of would be sufficiently covered by Rs. 400,000. Mr. Ormiston in his reply dwelt on the value of the alterations he proposed; and after a discussion, in which the principal expression of opinion was one of alarm at the reduced size of Vihar and the necessity of getting a scheme introduced as quickly as possible, and which would at the same time be a mainstay in the event of such a catastrophe happening to Vihar as would leave Bombay almost as bad as waterless, the Bench agreed to Mr. Walton's No. 3 scheme, with Mr. Ormiston's suggestions, to be carried out for the estimate of Rs. 500,000.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 15.

LEAVE AND ALLOWANCES

No. 3232.—Dec. 21.—Difficulties having been found in applying the various rules regarding the salary drawn by officers in appointments of which the pay rises from a minimum to a maximum, the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following statement of the rules in force for the counting of increments of progressive pay and salary. Sections VII., VIII., and IX. of the Acting Allowance Code are superseded, being, with the following modifications, incorporated in these rules:—

Modifications.

(1.) The rule in clause (b) of section VII. ceases to have effect; until the publication of the Acting Allowance Code, it applied only to Ministerial officers and to the classified list of the Financial Department; and, in all but extreme instances, the rules now published give the same allowances.

(2.) The privilege conceded in clause (c) of section VII. is restricted to appointments, the minimum pay of which is not less than Rs. 100; and it is extended to substantive appointments as well as officiating.

No refunds need be demanded in consequence of these modifications.

Rules for Counting Increments in Progressive Salaries.

I. (a). When an officer is first appointed (whether the appointment be substantive or officiating) to an office of which the pay is progressive, and the minimum pay is not less than Rs. 100, the pay of the appointment shall, for the purpose of calculating his salary, be ascertained by counting towards the increments any continuous period in excess of a year immediately preceding the date on which the appointment takes effect, during which the officer's pay—

(1) if progressive, has been at its maximum, and

(2) has not been less than the minimum pay of the appointment.

Provided that not more than a year can be counted under this section.

(b). If the minimum pay of the appointment is less than Rs. 100, no time can be counted towards the increments before the date on which the appointment takes effect.

II. After an officer's first appointment, the pay of the appointment shall, for the purpose of calculating his salary, be ascertained by counting towards the increments (in addition to any time admissible under section I.):—

(i). Any time, whether continuous or not, during which he has officiated in the appointment, and during which—

(1) his pay, if progressive, has been at its maximum, and

(2) his salary has been not less than the minimum pay of the appointment.

(ii). Any time during which he has substantively held the appointment.

III. (a). If the officer is officiating in the appointment his acting allowance shall be calculated on the mean pay of the appointment; his maximum salary shall be the pay of the appointment as fixed in accordance with sections I. and II.; and his minimum salary shall be half the mean pay of the appointment.

(b). If the officer holds the appointment substantively, his pay shall be the pay of the appointment as fixed in accordance with sections I. and II.

IV. An officer may, by excluding a previous appointment, count a subsequent appointment as the "first appointment under these rules."

Example.

A officiated from 1st January, 1872, till 31st March, 1872, in an appointment the pay of which was progressive, but his own pay not being at the maximum, he was not entitled to count any time under section I.

He is again appointed to officiate on 1st January, 1874, but his pay having for some time been at the maximum, and the other conditions being fulfilled, the circumstances are such that, if this were his first appointment, he would be entitled, under section I. to count nine months towards the increments.

As this is more advantageous than it would be to count under Section II. only the three months of his first officiating tenure, he would, by this section, exclude the first officiating tenure, and count the second tenure (beginning on 1st January, 1874,) as the first. The three months of course could not be afterwards counted under Section II.

V. In departments in which the pay is regulated according to classes, an officer may count, under Section II., any time during which he has officiated in a higher class, as if he had during that time officiated in any lower class. Time thus counted cannot be afterwards counted towards an increment in the higher class.

VI. Time spent on leave, with allowances, counts towards increments in the same manner as if during it the officer had actually held or officiated in (as the case may be) the appointment on which he has a lien. But an increment accruing while an officer is on leave does not affect his allowances until he returns to duty.

VII. Time passed under suspension does not count towards increments, if the suspension is adjudged as penalty; but an officer, in directing reinstatement of a person who has been suspended, may declare that the time shall count.

VIII. The following special rules apply to the Post Office Department:—

(1.) Unless otherwise specially ordered by the Director-General, an officer can count time only under section II., and can count under part i. of that section only so much as is continuous.

(2.) An increment accruing in any other month than March must be postponed until the 1st of March next following.

Note.—Rules I. and V. were first promulgated in the Acting Allowance Code dated 1st August, 1871.

Rule V. may be applied in fixing the salaries of officers in the appointments which they were holding on 1st August, but no back pay can be drawn in consequence of the permission given by it.

Rule I. can be applied only in fixing the salaries of officers in appointments made on or after 1st August, but any officer holding an appointment on 1st August, 1871, may count that appointment as if it had been "first" made on that date.

CIVIL FURLONGS.—The undermentioned gentlemen have obtained (in January) leave of absence and furlough to Europe on medical certificate, under the rules of 1868, unless otherwise specified:—Capt. F. P. Luard, third assistant to the Agent to the Gov. gen. for Central India, privilege leave for thirty days, from the date in the current month on which he may avail himself thereof. Mr. G. THE INDIA COUNCIL.

At a meeting held on Wednesday, the directors of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce adopted the following resolutions with reference to the appointment of Sir Louis Mallet to the India Council. Copies of the resolutions are to be sent to the Secretary of State for India, the Premier, and to the Chambers of Commerce throughout the country:—

"The directors express their very great disappointment that the vacancy on the India Council, caused by the retirement of Sir James W. Hogg, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, has not been supplied by the selection of a gentleman practically acquainted with trade and commerce, after the recent remonstrance emanating from this Chamber, and endorsed by almost every other Chamber in the country, on the unsuitable choice of a distinguished lawyer, Sir H. J. S. Maine. The Chamber feels that the voice of the mercantile community of the United Kingdom has not received that consideration from his Grace the Secretary of State for India which the importance of the subject merits, and therefore feels it to be an incumbent duty again to complain that a representative of trade and commerce has not been chosen."

"The Chamber is at a loss to reconcile the statement made by Mr. Grant Duff, that the Council of India possesses no power of originating, suggesting, or controlling public measures for India, with the words used by the Marquis of Salisbury when addressing this Chamber, on October 27, 1868, namely, that the Council of India 'possesses enormous power.'"

"This Chamber endorses the emphatic words of Lord Salisbury, that complaints against the India Council 'must always continue to exist until there is a very considerable mercantile element introduced amongst its members.'"

"The Chamber appreciates very highly the character, talents, and experience of Sir Louis Mallet, and also of Sir H. J. S. Maine, but at the same time considers that such nominations are very far from complying with the requirements of the Chamber in regard to the introduction of a purely commercial element."

BONUS COMPENSATION COMMITTEE.

The following appeared in the Home News:—

"Sir,—Observing the 'caution' in the Homeward Mail, which evidently refers to a petition which I have (advisedly) sent out to India for the guidance of officers who have lost their regimental bonus, and which has already been largely adopted by them, every mail bringing a number of petitions to be confided to my care for presentation to Parliament during the coming session; and, lest the 'caution' in the article alluded to should shake, as it is doubtless intended to do, the confidence of the officers in me and my petition, I should feel obliged by your inserting this letter for their information and reassurance. Nothing can be clearer than the fourth clause of the Army Regulation Bill, which grants to the officers of the regiments named therein, 'when permitted to retire, a compensation equal to the sums they would have received according to the custom of their regiments from the junior officers of their regiments had they retired therefrom prior to the said appointed day.' In other words, it gives them what we have so long sought, the full bonus; and that such is the case is proved by the fact that an officer who lately retired from the 102nd (Royal Madras Fusiliers) was granted his full bonus of £3,000, minus about £90, the number of officers having been reduced since the regiment returned to England, the regimental scale in force in this regiment having been recognised by the commissioners. These facts are probably not generally known, but I maintain that we cannot possibly hold stronger ground than the precedent established by Clause 4, as it converts our long-established, sanctioned, and encouraged 'custom' into law, and for the extension of which to us the form prepared by me provides, and I feel certain this form may safely be used by all officers who are now in the service, or who retired before, or since the amalgamation, and who have in consequence of the breaking up of the regimental system, become losers by the cessation of the bonus formerly received by all Indian officers. It does not allude to any particular date, but simply asks that we may be treated the same as our brother officers who entered the non-purchase regiments."

"It is only fair to our committee and myself to state that we have worked unremittingly at this question for upwards of three years, and that it was at my solicitation that our indefatigable and disinterested advocates Sir Charles Wingfield, Colonel Sykes and Jervis, and other generous supporters in the House, reopened the case in Parliament with good results, and we believe we are fairly on the road to victory."

"At the eleventh hour (in December last) a new committee, under the title of 'The Indian Defence Committee,' suddenly started into existence, and attempted (most unfairly, it is considered by the officers whom I represent) to take the management out of our hands, and my committee having declined to accede to this proposal, the caution published in the Homeward Mail is the result. No doubt there are many other grievances to which the new committee may usefully direct its attention, but it is desirable that the names of the officers serving thereon should be made public."

EXPORT OF BULLION.—According to a circular of Mr. G. De Quetteville, the total shipments of specie by the Peninsular and Oriental steamers for the East during 1871 were £5,378,035, of which £1,728,368 was in gold, and the remainder in silver, against £3,195,718 in 1870, showing an increase of £2,182,317. From the Mediterranean ports they were £463,116 of gold only, showing a decrease of £447,773. The export by the steamers of the Messageries Impériales during the same period was £1,331,358 (£1,088,902 gold, £242,456 silver), showing an increase of £1,139,148 as compared with 1870.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF MADRAS.—The Earl of Morley, in speaking on Wednesday at the annual meeting of the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce, confirmed the report that the Government had offered him the Governorship of Madras Presidency. Having regard to strong domestic ties and personal considerations, he had felt it to be his duty to decline, while highly esteeming the honour done to him as a young man in offering him so responsible a position. Lord Morley remarked that his connection with the Chamber and his knowledge of the subject caused him to regard the removal of the Cape mails from Plymouth for comparatively slight pecuniary considerations as detrimental to public and commercial interests.

MEDICAL.—The Lancet understands that Mr. Cardwell has decided that in future the appointments in the various branches of the Medical Department at Whitehall-yard shall be tenable for five years, and that they can only be renewed on public grounds with the sanction of the Secretary for War. Dr. Rutherford, C.B., the successor to Dr. Crawford, is shortly expected to take up the duties of the medical branch; and Dr. Muir, C.B., will, on his arrival from India, become head of the sanitary branch. Dr. Beatson, C.B., will embark early in the present month for India, as Inspector-General of the British Medical Service in that country, and Dr. Crawford will, about the same time proceed to his post at Umballa as deputy inspector-general, vice Deputy Inspector-General Munro.

DRESS IN THE ARMY.—Under date February 2, the Commander-in-Chief has issued a general order, containing the following regulations regarding the dress of sub-lieutenants:—Cavalry: 1. The tunic, stable jacket, pantaloons, and overalls, to be of the pattern worn by other officers, but without lace or braid, except in Hussars, the sub-lieutenants of which will wear the tunic braided as for staff sergeants. The stripes on the pantaloons and overalls to be of cloth. 2. Sub-lieutenants will not be required to provide themselves with blue frock coats, dress belts, pouches, sword knots, or sabretaches. Infantry: 3. Tunics, patrol, and mess jackets are to be the same as worn by officers, but without lace or braid. 4. The dress-trousers, belts, and sashes are not to be worn by sub-lieutenants. 5. In other respects, the dress of sub-lieutenants, both of cavalry and infantry, is to be the same as for officers generally.

BRITISH INDIAN TEA COMPANY.—The ordinary half-yearly meeting of the British-Indian Tea Company (Limited) was held on Jan. 29, at the offices, 1 and 2, Great Winchester-street-buildings. The chair was occupied by Mr. A. R. Capel. The chairman, after moving the reception and adoption of the directors' report, said there was little in the company's affairs that called for remark, beyond the fact that the final weightment of the crop had been ascertained that day to be 282,681 lbs. Dr. Tripe said, in seconding the resolution, that they might congratulate themselves and the directors upon the present satisfactory and altered state of their affairs. He considered that a matter of much satisfaction was that the quality of the tea had greatly improved. In 1867-68 there were 267,000 lbs. of tea produce, realising £16,650; last year 261,000 lbs. were produced, and the receipts from that were £20,000—showing that, although the yield was less, the amount realised was greater by £3,350. The resolution was put to the meeting, and carried unanimously.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—On Jan. 26, the appeal case of Forbes v. Lutchmeput Sing and others, came before their Lordships for judgment. This was an appeal from Bengal, heard in the former sittings, and judgment was now given. It was remarkable for a litigation of upwards of twenty years. The present appeal was from a judgment of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 16th April, 1867, affirming a former decree of the same Court made in 1863, which affirmed a decision of the Zillah Court in 1860. The suit in this case was commenced in 1856, but there had been litigation in the matter since 1851, more than twenty years. Originally the suit was to establish the right of the appellant to some land with the mesne profits over a very lengthened period. The litigation had been carried on, and a question which arose in the matter had been decided by the Judicial Committee, as reported in "Moore's Indian Appeals." Sir Montague Smith gave the judgment of the committee, and traced the long history of the litigation between the parties. The only question raised by the appeal was the validity of the sale of the property. His Lordship reviewed the facts as disclosed, and said their Lordships would humbly recommend to her Majesty that the judgment be reversed and the appellant would be declared entitled to possession, and to receive the mesne profits and the costs incurred. The judgment of the Court was, that the appeal be allowed with costs.

CARNATIC RAILWAY.—The report of the directors states that since the last annual general meeting of the 6th of February, 1871, the engineering staff in India had been engaged in further surveys, with a view to the decision of the route of the line and its termini. Those surveys and accompanying estimates had been deposited with the Government of Madras, and the directors were therefore in expectation of early instructions to proceed with the necessary details. A communication had been received from his Grace the Secretary of State for India on the subject of a proposed amalgamation between the three railway companies in Southern India—viz., the Madras, the Great Southern of India, and the Carnatic—which would be submitted for the consideration of the shareholders. The views of the Government were contained in the following extracts from the letter of the India-office of the 4th inst.:—"Not only economy of construction and management, but unity of purpose would be secured by the amalgamation of the two capitals as soon as practicable. His Grace would even go further, and, being of opinion that considerable public benefit would ensue from the junction of the three companies now engaged on lines of railway in the Madras Presidency, be glad if the Madras, the Great Southern of India, and the Carnatic Railway Companies would agree to apply their joint resources to one system of railways for Southern India, and so avoid anything like diversity of interest or competition."

MAJOR-GENERAL CHESNEY.—We regret to have to record the death of this veteran officer, who died on Jan. 31, in the eighty-third year of his age, at his residence near Kilkeel, in Ireland. The name of Chesney has become so variously associated with the labours of the traveller, the savant, and the military critic, that it is sometimes difficult to apportion out among the members of this able and intelligent family the reputation they have collectively earned; but no doubt surrounds the claim of the aged general to be called, as he has generally been called, "the pioneer of the overland route to India." That is his distinct title to public gratitude; and it is one of which any man might well be proud. The first steps taken by General, then Captain Chesney, to seek a route for steam communication with India, through Egypt and Asia Minor, belong to the history of the past generation. It is now nearly forty years since he returned from his explorations of the Euphrates to ask the Government to give him the command of an expedition. The demand was granted; two vessels, appropriately named the Tigris and the Euphrate, were placed at his disposal. The indefatigable manner in which he prosecuted his scheme, in the face of many disappointments and discouragements, is well known. He has himself written the history of his travels and adventures; and the lines of communication now in existence bear witness to the practical value of his audacious projects. General Chesney has for many years back enjoyed the repose which was the fitting reward of much arduous toil; and now leaves behind him the record of a useful, honourable, and well-spent life.—Daily News.

RETIREMENT OF ARTILLERY OFFICERS.—We understand that the full-pay retirement in the Royal Artillery, known as "the £600 a year," is about to be discontinued. This is one of the "combinations of contrivances," so called by Mr. Childers' committee, under which officers are retired from the Artillery. Its original object was to secure to the officer an adequate and certain provision when no longer fit for active service, and on the other hand to assist in maintaining a sufficient flow of promotion. So long as the senior colonels of Artillery became eligible for, and received £600 a year retirements at seventy years of age, the money was profitably expended. Old and worn-out officers were removed from the active list, and the money was constantly turning. Owing, however, to the abnormal state of the regiment at present, due chiefly to large augmentations having pushed into the higher ranks men comparatively young in years, colonels became eligible for, and have for the last few years received, £600 a year retirements at from forty-eight to fifty years of age. Thus comparatively young and active officers are now removed to the retired list, and the money is locked up in young lives. This state of things could hardly have been contemplated by the Royal Commissioners in 1854, by whom the present retiring scale of pensions was fixed, and it cannot be a matter of surprise that the authorities should at length put a stop to a system which has been absolutely condemned by every subsequent commission. Whether the money will be expended for the future in purchasing out lieutenant-colonels or captains is a point undecided as yet, so far as we are aware, but the Secretary of State must surely by this time know that the great question of ordnance stagnation is not to be settled by any tinkering with existing materials, but requires to be dealt with so that the young officers may be encouraged to look forward to promotion and military honours, as the just reward for good and faithful services. We hear rumours that the first captains of artillery are to be made substantive majors. This would improve the prospects of the corps far more and at a far less cost than spasmodic efforts at improving retirement.—Globe.

THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.

The Times observes that every now and then we find signs of a strange regret on the part of merchants and manufacturers for the mercantile element which existed in the old Government, a desire that England should rule and legislate more directly in mercantile interests, and almost engage in mercantile transactions, as in the matter of the supply of cotton. These views have produced from time to time earnest memorials from commercial bodies, and the agitation, if we may call it so, was brought to a focus by a motion of Mr. Graves in May, 1870. The complaint of Mr. Graves was that the members of the Council were too purely professional. He had nothing but praise for their zeal and ability, and acknowledged that the Indian administration since 1858 had been, on the whole, successful. But of the fifteen every one had belonged to a service or profession in contradistinction to an independent career. Nine had been in the Civil Service, three upon the Bench, and three in the Army. These gentlemen were divided into committees, and deliberated on politics, military administration, justice, and finance, but had nothing to do with trade. The Chambers of Commerce had declared with one voice that trade ought to be represented, and that it suffered by not being represented. This was the opinion of Lord Salisbury, who had told the Manchester Chamber of Commerce that it was a pity the constitution of the Council was not more largely tinged with the mercantile element. It had been the opinion of Mr. Disraeli, who wished to give seats in the Council to representatives of the great English cities. Leeds, Bristol, Glasgow, Huddersfield, and Wakefield had expressed their opinions energetically. Mr. Graves found considerable support, but Mr. Grant Duff pointed out that the proposed policy was open to misconstruction, and should not be lightly adopted. In former times the complaint had been that India was governed on selfish mercantile principles by an association of London traders. Would not the same cry be revived if a commercial Council governed once more, with the only difference that the interests of Lancashire took the place of those of the City? Mr. Duff's arguments prevailed at the time; but the department has in the end recognised that the Chambers of Commerce had some ground for their remonstrance, and to acknowledge this is the object of the present official letter. The Duke of Argyll points out the essential difference between the present Council and the old Court of Directors in one important respect—the inducement of men of position to become members. To be a member of the Court of Directors was an object of ambition and interest to the foremost political and mercantile men in the country. There were large patronage, no small share of power, and an independent position. Now the patronage is abolished, there is a complete transfer of the initiative to the Secretary of State, and the duties which are left to the Council are comparatively obscure. These are "circumstances which have contributed gradually to eliminate members who have not belonged to the Indian services, and have not that personal interest in and that strong attachment to India for its own sake which have ever distinguished, in a marked degree, the servants of the Indian Government." This seems to us to explain the change which offends our Chambers of Commerce—the change from a mixed body of men, generally eminent and wealthy, of varied pursuits, to the strictly professional conclave which has since existed. The fact is that the Council is too poor, too powerless, and too hard-worked for mercantile or manufacturing magnates to sit on it, unless a complete change be made in its functions and authority. As a return to the model of the past might be dangerous, and would certainly be invidious, the Government has done the best thing in its power to satisfy the Chambers of Commerce. It has gone beyond the pale of Indian services in the appointment of Sir Henry Sumner Maine, and more recently of Sir Louis Mallet. The former has, indeed, been employed in a very high capacity in India, but his connection with that country was in its nature temporary, and he represents English eminence, and not Indian officialism. Sir Louis Mallet may satisfy the most earnest advocate of commercial councillors. He has been for many years at the Board of Trade, he is distinguished for his intimate acquaintance with commercial questions, and his official experience enables him to view them in the form most suitable for legislation or administration. This type of man is really a more efficient exponent of mercantile interests at a Government Board than any ordinary merchant, however successful or wealthy. The merchant is likely to know his own department of commerce, and to interest himself in the materials of his own peculiar history; but the general interest of trade and finance are safer with one accustomed to larger, more impartial and more scientific views.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The objects for which this Company is formed are the establishment, upon a complete and extensive scale, of factories for the manufacture of breech-loading rifles and other arms, ammunition, projectiles, and war materiel of all kinds, and for acquiring and working certain important patents and patent rights connected therewith, including the patents forming the system of Mr. Martini, which, after four years of exhaustive trials, has been adopted by her Majesty's Government, in connection with Mr. Henry's rifle barrel, as the arm of the British service, under the designation of the Martini-Henry Rifle; also the sole right of manufacture of the systems of Mr. Peabody and Mr. Westley Richards.

Arrangements have also been made with "The Henry Rifle Barrel Company (Limited)," for a licence upon the most favourable terms to rifle barrels according to the "Henry" patent.

This Company has also secured the sole right of manufacture, in England, of "Jones's Solid-head Metallic Cartridge Cases," with a perfect plant of machinery for their manufacture. These cases have been already adopted by nearly all the European and American Governments; they are specially adapted for use with mi-trailleuses, and are equally available for sporting and other purposes.

This Company has agreed to take over the Works, Plant, and Business, at Birmingham, of "The Westley-Richards Arms and Ammunition Company." These works are equal to a production of 2,000 breech actions, and 1,000,000 cartridges per week of all kinds. It is intended at once to erect additional works, so that the Company will, within the next twelve months, be enabled to manufacture at the rate of 100,000 complete rifles and bayonets per annum, with proportionate supplies of ammunition.

Major-general Dixon, C.B., who, during the last seventeen years, has been the Superintendent of her Majesty's Small Arms Factory at Enfield, has agreed to become the Managing Director of the Company.

The published reports of the Birmingham Small Arms Company (Limited) show that during the last four years it has paid three dividends of 20 per cent. per annum each, and one of 10 per cent., besides writing off 10 per cent. for depreciations, and carrying to the reserve fund upwards of £28,000, or about one-third of the paid-up capital.

When it is considered that the British Army and Reserve Forces alone, independently of Colonial Troops, will require a supply of upwards of 1,000,000 of the newly adopted rifles; that, during the last seventeen years, three-fifths of the total supply of arms for the British and East Indian troops have been furnished by the trade, and that the requirements of Foreign Governments will be much larger, the directors feel that the enterprise which they now offer to the public not only holds out promise of profitable investment, but may lay claim to the dignity of a work of national character and importance.

The purchase-money for the patents and patent rights acquired by the Company is £45,500, of which it is expected that a considerable sum will be shortly received from her Majesty's Government, and for the other interests and properties (details of which will be found in the Prospectus) £133,500, which is based upon the expenditure incurred by the vendors who have acquired and established them within the past fifteen months.

Of this sum of £132,500, the vendors take £100,000 in fully paid-up shares, and have agreed to become directors of the Company.

The Company has by its Articles of Association adopted the following agreements:—

1. The contract dated 1st January, 1872, between Thomas Greenwood, Westley-Richards, and John Batley, trading under the style of "The Westley-Richards Arms and Ammunition Company," therein called the vendors, and William Manley Hall Dixon and the several indentures and agreements therein recited and set forth in the Prospectus.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the Agreements adopted thereby, can be seen at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors in London, and copies of the Prospectus of the Company can be obtained there, or at the temporary offices of the Company.

The preliminary expenses incident to the formation of the Company will be strictly limited to actual and proper payments. No promotion money will be paid.

If no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full. If a smaller number of shares be allotted than are applied for, the balance of the deposit will be applied in payment of the amount due on allotment.

THE NATIONAL ARMS AND AMMU- NITION COMPANY (Limited).

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the Subscription Lists for the Shares in this Company will be CLOSED on WEDNESDAY, 7th inst., for London, and on THURSDAY, 8th inst., for Country applications.

OF THE

BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA.

FROM THE

APPOINTMENT OF LORD HARDINGE

TO THE

POLITICAL EXTINCTION OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

BY

LIONEL JAMES TROTTER,

Late of the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers.

The first volume of this History embraces the period from Lord Hardinge's appointment in 1844 to the retirement of the Marquis of Dalhousie in 1856.

The second volume commences with the arrival of Lord Canning in India in 1856, and closes with his lordship's death in 1862. This being the most eventful period in the annals of the East India Company, including the Mutiny, great pains have been taken in its narration.

"Captain Trotter has done good service in providing the public with a sequel to a standard work. . . . And in every way his performance is worthy to take rank with that of his predecessor. . . . The thoroughly satisfactory manner in which the task has been performed is greatly to the author's credit. . . . We take our leave of the work, congratulating its author upon having produced an addition to the 'History of India' at once permanent in purpose and popular in execution; acceptable in every way to the wants of the public, and especially adapted for the enlightenment of young members of the local service, to whom the modern annals of the country which they help to administer are of far more importance than the history of remote periods having little or no relation to the present day."—Standard.

"Both the plan and execution of the work are deserving of high praise. Full of interest and animation, and narrates with clearness and brevity all that took place during the period of which it treats. . . . The second volume of Mr. Trotter's history possesses the same merits by which the first was distinguished. It is written with great animation, and often with considerable graphic power. It tells its story with perspicuity and without needless or tiresome digressions. It avoids as far as possible that controversial vein into which Indian politicians and historians are alike prone to fall, and it is as impartial as any work is likely to be which deals with times so near our own. . . . The narrative of the spirit-stirring events of the mutiny will of course have the greatest attraction for most readers, and it is in truth the best, as it is the principal part of the present volume.

It appears to us that Mr. Trotter has been eminently successful in his treatment of a very exciting and interesting period of recent history."—London Review.

"The volume is full of interesting matter, comprising every event of importance during the exciting period of the rebellion, told in a concise, straightforward, and impartial manner, unincumbered by those copious extracts from documentary evidence which often serve no other purpose than increasing the bulk without adding to the usefulness of a work of this description."—Observer.

"Captain Trotter's reflections are few. . . . He has his own views, though he does not force them upon us in detail. . . . All this proves him to be far above the narrowness of the average Anglo-Indian. He speaks out boldly, too, in defence of Lord Gough. . . . A word as to our author's descriptive powers; they are such as his lighter writings would lead us to expect. . . . Whatever he has to tell Captain Trotter tells it in an animated and picturesque style. The night on the field at Ferozeshuhur . . . is admirably painted; so is the grand success of Goojat. The disarming of the veterans of the Khalsa . . . is a striking scene. Captain Trotter's book opens up many other interesting questions; it is full of notices of social changes; it points out the specially unfortunate way in which the annexation of Oudh was managed."—Fortnightly Review.

"Here we have before us the first volume of an eminently readable history. . . . The arrangement of the matter, the style, and, above all, the spirit which pervades his pages, are worthy of great commendation. Mr. Trotter is singularly free from the faults of a partisan writer. . . . The volume concludes with a masterly criticism on Lord Dalhousie's character and services."—Calcutta Englishman.

"We cannot say that he has dealt unjustly by Lord Canning's memory. . . . A well-considered volume, in which the heartiest acknowledgments are paid to Lord Canning for his temperate wisdom at a time when there was no man more abused than he. . . . He writes thoughtfully, yet with a soldier's sense of the stir of a brisk military narrative. His history of this great struggle is full and impartial. . . . We need not follow him through his vigorous rehearsal of the well-known incidents. It forms a very lucid history, the several parts being well planned and well grouped, and no important point being omitted or misrepresented."—Examiner.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

the mind more rapidly, or wears out the body much faster, than a stomach incapable of fully digesting its food. Indigestion renders life so miserable that from it spring most of the suicides which daily shock our nerves. If Holloway's Pills be taken regularly for a time, and his Ointment be twice daily rubbed over the digestive organs, these melancholy symptoms will soon cease, and pleasurable thoughts succeed the dismal forebodings engendered by dyspepsia, and which drive the sufferer to misery and despair. Holloway's priceless preparations, by briskly acting on the liver and other internal organs, have long stood prominently forward for the wonderful cures they have effected.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Jan. 22; Agra and Madras, Jan. 20; Calcutta, Jan. 19.

THE Indian papers begin to give some details of the recent Kuka rising in Sirhind. It appears that on the night of the 14th January some three hundred of these fanatics surprised the old Sikh fort of Malod, about twenty miles south of Ludiana. The son of the Malod Sirdar was among the wounded, and several of his retainers were killed. Helping themselves, no doubt, to what arms they could find, the same body or a part of it went off next morning to attack the fort or fortified town of Malair Kotlah, about fifteen miles further south. Here however, after killing seven or eight people, they were driven off with heavy loss, thanks to the prompt action of the Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Cowan, who with the help of his police and some Sikh levies followed up the insurgents, until the whole body had been killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. Some seventy of them with their leaders, who had made their way into the Patiala State, were surrounded by the troops of the Patiala Rajah, and either killed or taken alive. The Chiefs of Jhind and Nabha also helped in the chase. Fortunately the telegraph wires had not been cut, for on the night of the 15th Mr. Davies, the Lieutenant-governor, then at Delhi, got news of what had happened; and early next morning the 72nd Highlanders and the 1st Ghoorkas, with a hundred of the 12th Bengal Cavalry and Major Hughes's Mule Battery were on their way by train to the scene of danger. Three companies of the 54th Foot and half a battery of artillery were likewise sent off from Jalandhar to strengthen the Ludiana garrison. Meanwhile however the insurrection had been fairly stamped out by the native soldiers and policemen on the spot. Mr. Cowan, to whose energy that issue was mainly owing, is an officer of known ability, who made his mark during the great Mutiny, and in 1862 displayed not more zeal than humanity in tending the cholera patients and the famine-stricken natives of Goorgaon.

RAM SINGH, the head of the Kuka sect, took no open part in his followers' movement, but appears to have accompanied Mr. Cowan in his march against them. No trust however could be placed in such a man, and along with two other leaders he was sent off under escort to Allahabad.

THE Indian papers contain news telegraphic or epistolary from the Loshai Expedition down to January 12th. On the 7th General Bouchier had reached a place on the Towheetoo, seven miles eastward of "No. 7 Station" on the Toweeboon, where some of his troops were still encamped on the 4th. The road thither was full of steep ups and downs. No. 7 Station was to be for that present his advanced depot. On the morrow he moved on to Daidu, the westernmost of Poiboy's villages. Messengers from Poiboy and other chiefs were in General Bouchier's camp. The cold nights and heavy fogs were telling on his troops, but he speaks of them as being all in good heart and eager to get on. Of the wounded two were dead, but the rest were doing well at Tipai Mukh. On the 11th the General reconnoitred about four miles, as far as Old Kolell, a deserted village half a mile long, containing the house and the tomb of the Chief Vonpilall. The latter is hung round with skulls of animals and "some emblematic curiosities." The village itself stands 4,450 feet above the sea. The site of the General's camp was in lat. 24 deg. 1 min. 43 sec., and lon. 93 deg. 10 min. He reports the country in his front as being more open. All were still well in camp, and Major Moore, with Captain Hidayat Ali's Coolies, was expected there the next day.

On the 10th General Brownlow was within a march of Syloo Savoonga. He had been rejoined the day before by Colonel Macpherson, who lost one Ghoorka killed, and one officer with nine men wounded by bamboo stakes, in his successful attack on the strongly stockaded village of Lal Ghoora. He brought back with him "clear proof" of the Syloos' complicity in last year's outrages, in the shape of a seer weight (2 lbs.), stamped C. H. Crane, Wolverhampton, which must, thinks General Brownlow, have come from the Cachar tea-gardens. It appears that the Loshais are sometimes beaten at their own game. A party of them on the 6th were preparing an ambush, when they themselves were surprised by a convoy, with the loss of one killed and two wounded.

THE Delhi manœuvres were still going on. Sir H. Tombs, the winner of the fight for the Ridge, scored another victory on the 13th by his successful defence of it against both General Travers and General McMurdo. The manœuvres were expected to last through January. One officer, Colonel Fraser of the 11th Hussars, seems to have been knocked up already by the hard work.

In the Legislative Council Mr. F. Stephen, on the 16th January, made an excellent and weighty speech in support of his Brahmo Marriage Bill. In spite of his arguments several members demanded further delay and fresh references to the local governments. Lord Mayo, however, would only consent to adjourn the question for a month, on the understanding that the Bill should then pass in something like its present form.

SIR WILLIAM MUIR's answer to the Indian Government on the subject of the Income-tax in the North-West Provinces cuts away all ground for the charges rashly levelled at him by his official censors. With the conciseness of conscious strength his Honour thinks that "it would have been reasonable—perhaps only just—to have considered whether causes may not have been at work, other than want of effective supervision, before assuming and publishing to the whole of India" an imputation so far from the truth. With regard to the desire of the Government that no one below the rank of Tahsildar should assess for the income-tax, Sir William quietly observes that such a limitation will not benefit his province, "for the power of making assessments is already confined to grades of officers higher in rank than that of Tahsildar." With regard to the praises lavished on his predecessor, Sir G. Edmonstone, he observes that "fortunately there is no need for him to place his administration in competition with that of that most eminent and lamented statesman, since the present Lieutenant-Governor was the agency alone through which Sir G. Edmonstone worked the income-tax." So far from owing to any want of care on his own part or that of his district officers, he describes the latter as having profited by past experience in their efforts to improve the present system, while none of the precautions enjoined in 1861 have been neglected of late years. Finally Sir William reads his assailants a lesson of practical wisdom in the following words:—

As the people become familiar with the working of the tax, they have learned the comparative helplessness of the officers of Government in the ascertainment of real income and the checking of evasion; and antagonism has thus grown up between the people and the Government assessors which has not tended to the popularity of the measure. For the same reason, their experience of the vagueness of the grounds we have to go upon has no doubt emboldened those through whom the assessors are obliged to make their investigations to profit by our ignorance. It is not surprising that people so venal in their habits should rapidly become more practised adepts in corruption, and should be able year by year to turn the opportunity to better account.

FROM a Bombay paper we learn that Sir S. Fitzgerald is to remain in office until May, two months beyond the appointed time, in order that Sir Philip Wodehouse may come home to complete his arrangements for taking up the post already assigned to him.

FROM recent telegrams we learn that on the 25th January General Bouchier, with a wing of the 44th N.I., was suddenly attacked by a large body of Loshais, who had lain in ambush behind some jungle skirting the bed of a rocky stream. They were brilliantly repelled, however, by his sepoy, who followed them up a hill 5,500 feet high, and afterwards drove them from two of their stockades. A simultaneous attack on the General's rear was also defeated with much loss to the enemy, whose cunning evidently outstrips their fighting powers. If they were better armed they would prove very troublesome customers indeed. In spite of two slight wounds on head and arm, General Bouchier the next day himself directed an attack on a large body gathered under several chiefs. The Loshais appear to have lost heavily, while on our side four were killed and a few wounded, including the General himself. On the 29th he attacked, carried, and burned another large village, without losing a single man. The enemy again suffered considerably.

ON the 25th January General Nuthall reported the arrival in camp of as many as 207 Manipoories, escaped captives from the Loshai country. Some of them had been prisoners for thirty years. Another telegram announces the recovery by General Brownlow's force of Mrs. Mary Winchester and her little girl, who had been carried off by the Loshais in last year's raid into Cachar. On the 3rd February General Bouchier's Column was within a day's march of Poiboy, another Loshai stronghold, or stockaded village, which the General hoped to reach next day. No further fighting had taken place since the 29th. On his way to Poiboy his force had to cross a ridge six thousand-feet high.

THE Kuka outbreak at Malod has not yet been lifted out of the region of mystery into that of intelligible fact. All we know at present from the latest telegrams is that forty-nine of the rebels who attacked the fort had been shot or blown from guns by order of Deputy Commissioner Cowan, before the Commissioner himself, Mr. Forsyth, had time to interfere with an order that no more prisoners should be put to death without form of trial. Of the thirty survivors sixteen appear to have been tried and executed with Mr. Forsyth's sanction. Two others have been sentenced to transportation, and ten more remain in custody. An inquiry has been ordered into the conduct of Mr. Cowan, who has meanwhile been suspended from his post. At first blush he appears to have displayed a cruel excess of energy, but it must be remembered that these insurgents belonged to a set of dangerous fanatics, whose power for evil is not to be measured by the completeness of their failure in the present instance. Some time ago* we warned our readers against too ready a belief in the collapse of the Kuka movement on account of the prompt punishment inflicted on the murderers at Raikot and Amritsar. Ram Singh, the head of these Sikh assassins, lately numbered his followers by tens of thousands, ready to obey any command which his trusty subalterns might convey to them. His own head quarters had long been fixed in the Ludiana district, and he himself had probably much to do with the recent attack on Malod. Journalists with vague ideas of Indian topography have wondered at the madness of a rising in "the immediate neighbourhood of Delhi," which is only two hundred miles from Ludiana; but people who know that part of India will understand the temptation offered to a body of desperate fanatics by the temporary withdrawal of so many troops from their accustomed stations in the Punjab. Had they succeeded in raising Sirhind during the two or three days that elapsed before the arrival of succours from Delhi, their seeming madness might have been called by a more respectful name, and the mimic campaign around Delhi have given place to the stern requirements of civil war. Happily for us and themselves, the Sikh Rajahs of Sirhind appear to have proved equal to the need, and the outbreak was suppressed before one English soldier had arrived from the Delhi camp. When the full particulars of this curious affair are made known, it will probably be found that Mr. Cowan's summary reprisals were conceived in a spirit of the truest mercy. The Press of India is not remarkable for its cruel leanings, as the comments of a good many journals on the conduct of the Loshai campaign would show. But the Times Correspondent deems it worth noting that few of them have found fault with Mr. Cowan.

A Times telegram of February 11, from Calcutta, announces the death at Government House of Admiral Cockburn the afternoon before. He was to be buried the next day with military honours. He was left behind when his flagship, the Glasgow, went with the Viceroy to Rangoon. According to the same telegram, General Keyes, on the 8th, left Edwardesabad with 1,700 men to punish some hostile tribes. Several chiefs professed submission, but afterwards the troops were fired on. General Keyes immediately attacked and destroyed the village of Hyder Khail. Other villages were punished. Our loss was six wounded. The enemy lost 40. Having by this "prompt dash" effected their object, the troops returned to their quarters.

WE notice with regret the death of General W. F. Beatson, of the Bengal Army, whose name was a good deal before the English public during the Crimean War as that of the officer who organised the Bashi Bazuks of the Turkish Contingent. The deceased general entered the Bengal Infantry in 1820, but was only a regimental captain of 1837. Eleven years afterwards he gained his regimental majority, and became a lieutenant-colonel in 1853, at which time he commanded the cavalry of the Nizam's Contingent. His warlike instincts had led him in 1836 to serve with the Spanish Legion under Sir DeLacy Evans. For these services he received the Cross of Saint Ferdinand from the Spanish Sovereign, Queen Isabella. In 1844-5 he served under Sir Charles Napier in his Trukkie campaign. During his service with the Nizam's contingent Major Beatson had frequent brushes with the turbulent Rohillas of the Dakhan, receiving in 1848 the thanks of the Indian Government for his capture of the Fort of Rymow. For his services in the Crimean War he became a lieutenant-general in the Turkish army, besides obtaining the Sultan's medal for the Danube campaign under General Omar Pasha and the Crimean medal with clasps for Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sevastopol. In 1858 he was still only a brevet-colonel in the Bengal army, and a lieutenant-colonel commanding the newly-raised 4th Europeans. In 1862 Colonel Beatson was only "doing duty in the Meerut division," but he afterwards came in as a major-general for the command of the Sirhind Division, and had not long returned to England before his death.

MAJOR-GENERAL J. FORDYCE, who succeeds the late Sir A. Lindsay as Colonel of the 22nd Brigade Royal Artillery, has seen a good deal of war-service in his day. Entering the Bengal Artillery in 1821, he gained his first medal in the Arracan campaign of 1824-5. For his services in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6 he obtained a medal with clasps for Ferozshah and Soobraon, where he commanded a battery of artillery. Brevet-Major Fordyce commanded a nine-pounder troop of horse artillery—one of the first such ever tried in India—throughout the Punjab Campaign of 1848-9, including the battles of Chilianwalla and Goojrat, and the subsequent chase of the discomfited Sikhs and Afghans under General Gilbert. At Goojrat his troop especially distinguished itself for coolness and good handling under a fire which twice compelled it to fall back for more horses and ammunition. These services gained him another medal with two clasps and a brevet lieutenant-colonelcy. In December, 1849, Colonel Fordyce commanded the artillery employed in a campaign against the Yusufzais, under General Bradshaw. For this also he received a clasp. In 1861 he became a Major-General, and for some years commanded the Presidency Division.

SOME of our readers may be interested to hear that the Bonus Compensation Committee under Colonel Phillips meet every Tuesday, at 1 P.M., in 55, Parliament-street. We understand that a petition to the House of Commons will very soon be ready for signature at the same address. Officers living in or near London should lose no time in signing it. At their last meeting the Committee unanimously resolved to abide by their own form of petition, which with the sanction of competent judges prays for compensation on the principle admitted in Clause IV. of the Army Regulation Act; in other words on the principle of compensation, not for past outlay, but for the customary bonus payable to each officer on retirement before the Amalgamation. The new Army Defence Committee have drawn up a rival petition of their own, asking for the bonus which each petitioner would have received "if he had continued in the service of the East India Company." They have found an imaginary flaw in the principle of Clause IV.; but perhaps the best answer to all such objections lies in the fact that one officer of a new line regiment has already received his £3,000 from the Purchase Commissioners in settlement of his claim to a major's bonus. Such an acknowledgment of a claim advanced on the principle of Clause IV. brings into clearer relief the injustice hitherto endured by officers of the old Indian Army, whose bonus system was sanctioned more than thirty years ago by the appointed ministers and agents of the Crown. Those officers who have hitherto followed the lead of Colonel Phillips may therefore rest assured as to the perfect safety of the position he has taken up by basing their claims on the principle of Clause IV. in Mr. Cardwell's Act. Stronger ground they could not wish to work upon than a clause which extends to non-purchase regiments the very principle of compensation for the full market value of an officer's step, which had already been conceded to the purchase regiments on account of payments theretofore legal only in part. As for the argument which a contemporary draws from another part of the same Act, it is enough to say that the provision against any officer's receiving "more than he would have received if this Act had not passed" simply means to guard against the putting forth of extravagant or unfair claims.

COUNTING SERVICE.—ARTILLERY AND ENGINEERS.—It is notified that officers of the late Indian artillery, engineers, and as well as officers of the Indian army transferred to the new line regiments, cavalry, and infantry, will be allowed to count as service towards retirement, under the Indian Pension Rules, the whole period of their residence at the Staff College, Sandhurst, in the same manner as officers of the British army, provided they pass a successful examination.

BANDMASTERS.—H.E. the Governor general in Council is pleased to notify, under instructions from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, that enlisted bandmasters of British regiments provided with passage in H.M.'s Indian troopships are entitled to the accommodation and victualling of a staff sergeant only, and that all private or civilian bandmasters, if allowed a passage on such vessels, will be required to pay the full cost of whatever is supplied them.

KNOWLEDGE OF LOCAL VERNACULARS.

THE letter from an Indian Moonshee which appeared in our last issue, and on which another correspondent has since commented to good effect, deserves to be read in connection with the late remarks of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab on the backwardness of district officers in that province in learning the language spoken by the bulk of the border tribes. To their utter ignorance of Pushto, or the Afghan tongue, as spoken by nearly all the Pathan tribes on the Punjab frontier, his Honour ascribes the recent rising among the Mohammed Kheyls, for which they have since paid so dearly. If their grievances, and some they appear to have had, could only have been revealed to officers who understood their language, their attack upon the British outpost, with all its unpleasant consequences to themselves, would never, in Mr. Davies's opinion, have taken place. Pushto is not the easiest language in the world to learn, and it seems indeed that an old Bengal officer, Major Raverty, was the first who ever compiled a regular grammar and dictionary of that tongue. Mr. Davies however will admit of no such excuse for ignorance on the part of district officers who have long been stationed on the Punjab frontier. It stands to reason that such ignorance of the local vernaculars must redound to the public injury, especially in the case of these proud Arab tribes on the North-Western marches, who are brought into continual contact with Punjabi and Hindu officials of a race they notoriously despise. "Every one," said the Waziri chiefs who met Mr. Davies at Baun, "hates the Waziris. The crimes of others are attributed to us. The British officers listen to what is told them by their Munshis, and never to us. Every peon with a badge is our master." Complaints like these indicate the kind of sore which rankles in so many Pathan hearts. Unruly and troublesome these fiery borderers may often be; but there seems no reason to doubt that some of the outrages which have been so sternly punished were provoked by the harsh and oppressive conduct of native officials badly kept in hand by their English chiefs. "How did you manage to govern the people of Hazara with so much ease?" was a question once put to General James Abbott, whose name is still widely cherished there by his former subjects. "By treating them as gentlemen," was the short and significant answer. He spoke with them frankly and courteously, face to face, instead of trusting to the garbled and distorted tales of his native subordinates. We are therefore glad to find that Mr. Davies means to insist on a competent knowledge of Pushto from all officers posted to districts where it may be spoken. If the accounts we have heard from other parts of India be true, the principle thus tardily enforced in the Punjab needs early extension to other provinces, in which English officers are too often prone to deal with their native neighbours through the agency of intriguing and double-tongued petty officials.

RETIREMENT OF SIR JAMES HOGG.

ON the approaching retirement of Sir James Hogg from the Council of India, a few words of reference to his long and distinguished career will not be deemed out of place. The new member of her Majesty's Privy Council has already reached an age at which most men would have felt unequal to the demands of public business; but his retirement from office has been hastened by no failure of the mental powers for which he was always conspicuous from the day when, more than half a century ago, he held his first brief at the Calcutta Bar. For several years Mr. Hogg filled the important post of Registrar to the Supreme Court at Calcutta, during the rule of Lord Amherst and afterwards of Lord William Bentinck. His return to England in 1833, after seventeen years of Indian service, was soon followed by his entrance into political life at home. In December, 1834, he was elected member for Beverley on the Conservative side, and from that time until 1857 he figured more and more prominently in the House of Commons. In those days the position of an East India Director was a prize worth fighting for, and in 1839 the member for Beverley had won his quest. Seven years later he was appointed Chairman of the Court of Directors, a post which he held two years running, discharging its duties with rare zeal and ability. Day after day he took his seat at the India House punctual to the minute, at a time when nine o'clock in the morning was not the right too early to begin work. In these days, we believe, it is rather the fashion for clerks in the public offices to make their appearance at eleven or twelve, and, like Charles Lamb, to atone for coming late by leaving early.

For nearly twenty years Sir James Hogg—whose baronetcy dated from the first year of his chairmanship—played a leading part in the supervision of Indian affairs, and in all Parliamentary debates on Indian questions. For some years even before 1839 his suasive eloquence had been at times employed on behalf of the Company whose foremost champion he was afterwards to become. When in 1835 the appointment of Lord Heytesbury as successor to Lord W. Bentinck was cancelled by the Ministry which succeeded Sir Robert Peel's short-lived Cabinet, Mr. Hogg's voice was heard replying to Sir John Hobhouse in dignified protest against a party measure so contrary to all precedent, and so fatal to the progress of good government in India. Like the rest of his colleagues he deprecated but in vain the march of Sir John Keane's army into Afghanistan, and equally in vain did he urge on Lord Auckland the policy of a timely retreat from that country in 1840. His influence, no doubt, was visible in the firm attitude of the India-house towards Lord Ellenborough, when the Directors stood upon their right to recall him in 1844. To that influence also Lord Dalhousie must have been largely indebted for the support his bold and forward policy in most matters received at home. In the prolonged debates on the India Bill of 1853 Sir James delivered a masterly defence of the Company against the wild onslaughts of Messrs. Bright and Phillimore; but all his eloquence failed to arrest the tide already running more and more strongly against the continuance of the Company's rule. What still remained of their political patronage was finally taken out of their keeping by the events of 1857; and when the sceptre passed out of their hands into those of a Council governed by a Parliamentary chief, Sir James Hogg cheerfully took his seat at a board of virtual shadows, if we may accept the picture lately drawn of it by Mr. Grant Duff. On this point, however, the Under-Secretary for India differs somewhat from Lord Salisbury, who grumbled at the checks imposed on his own authority by the special powers entrusted to his Council. Be that as it may, it was no small matter for Sir James Hogg to give up his place and prospects in Parliament in order that the reconstructed India Office might have the benefit of his long experience and great administrative skill. Nor was this the first occasion on which he had sacrificed his private interests for what appeared to be the public good. Many years before, while he was still an East India Director, he had refused the lucrative post of Judge-Advocate in Bengal when it was offered him by Sir Robert Peel, as incompatible with the duty he owed to India. His retirement from the Council removes one of the last remaining links that connected the India of to-day with the India of fifty years ago. At the ripe age of eighty-two Sir James gives up the post he might have continued to hold until his death, before any decay of his mental powers could have suggested the absolute need for such a step. Few men have earned so good a right to the holiday he might well have taken years ago.

MR. STOCQUELER AND MR. MACAULAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I noticed with satisfaction a letter in your paper of the 6th instant signed "Mir Zulfiqar Ali," inasmuch as a subject is alluded to in it which is but seldom noticed, but which is nevertheless of extreme importance in connection with our administration of India. I refer, of course, to the lamentable ignorance of Indian dialects which prevails amongst the English resident there. My old friend the Moonshee, whom I recollect as an able public servant some twenty-five years ago, when he was attached to a native regiment, writes with great spirit and ability upon this topic; and he is well qualified by abundant experiences to do so. Not that what he advances is particularly novel; on the contrary, it is sufficiently notorious. But I hold that he does excellent service in acting as a spokesman for his fellow-countrymen, who in private only deplore bitterly our incompetency to converse with them.

That this incompetency on our part must moreover carry with it grave public consequences common reflection will show. Justice must often miscarry, opportunities be lost and misunderstandings arise, when the vehicle of communication between the rulers and the ruled is so little understood by the former as at present. If it be objected that our officers in India have to pass compulsory examinations in the native languages, and that therefore the facts deposed to by Mir Zulfiqar Ali cannot be true, the reply to this is, alas, sufficiently notorious too. The passing of these examinations is no criterion of efficiency. The amount of cut and dried knowledge requisite for the purpose is as easily acquired as lost. No real linguistic proficiency is necessary. It follows therefore that something is wrong in our system of teaching these languages, and it is obviously to our interest to correct it.

And here, again, a portion of the Moonshee's letter may be quoted as apropos to this conclusion. He says: "The spoken Oriental tongues cannot be properly taught except by natives of sound education." The italics are mine, since I conceive the word "natives" constitutes the gist of his argument. It is indeed a well-ascertained fact that the genius of all Oriental tongues differs so intrinsically from our own, that in very, very rare cases only can an Englishman acquire one sufficiently to be able to teach it efficiently. Well-qualified natives, therefore, should be exclusively employed for this work in this country, and it were much to be desired that every young man, before proceeding to India, should be compelled to study under such for some stated period. The establishment of a College under Government supervision seems an obvious and desirable measure with reference to these remarks; but I have already trespassed sufficiently upon your space, and must conclude.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
CENTURION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Of the many absurd changes in the course of study at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, the most absurd is the total exclusion of Hindustani as a subject, both at the entrance examination and during the two and a-half years' subsequent residence. Considering that three out of four of our artillery and engineer officers are almost certain to pass at least some years of their life in India, one may well be surprised at this neglect of the language. German is still continued as a subject, and yet, except in the (at present) extremely improbable event of our being involved in a European war, it will not be half so useful to an officer as Hindustani. Moreover, the facilities for learning German after leaving Woolwich are far greater, and so are the inducements. Many an officer spends a month or two on the Continent, and if he wishes to make his way through Germany will probably make some effort to learn the language before starting. But the inducements to study Hindustani in this country are small, and it is neglected until the officer at length lands in India and there finds himself cheated right and left by the natives from not being able to speak a syllable of the language.

The reasons alleged, I am told, for the omission of Hindustani from the curriculum of studies are, first, the extremely small number of cadets taking it up, and secondly, that it can be learned much more quickly and easily in the country where it is spoken. The first difficulty might be got over by not allowing more than a certain number (say one half) of a division to take up German, and obliging all the others to take up Hindustani. The second reason, if worth anything, might be equally well urged in regard to the selected candidates of the Civil Service of India, and yet they are obliged to study for two years certain Oriental languages before going out. When we consider the total change in the mode of life, the attractions of hunting, shooting, &c., and above all, the natural languor produced by a residence in a tropical climate, it must be confessed that to a man who does not mean to spend his life in India the inducements to study the language are not very great. Again, suppose on a sudden emergency a large body of troops sent out to India. Fancy the disadvantage of not one officer possessing even a smattering of the language. If some of the officers had only learned a little of it in England, they would in a few weeks' time brush up their former knowledge, and be able to turn it to some account.

If the commissioners appointed to revise the course at Woolwich had paid some regard to practical utility instead of wasting the cadets' time on the study of the ancient classics, they would never have made the mistake of excluding a language spoken over the greater part of India by tens of millions of her Majesty's subjects.—I am, Sir, A BARRISTER.

INDIAN ARMY DEFENCE COMMITTEE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Strictures not altogether deserved appeared in your last issue on the action of the Indian Army Defence Committee, and an article bearing a strong resemblance to your leader was published in the last Home News. You will not, I believe, prejudge the question from an ex parte view, and I will be as concise as possible in my explanation of facts.

You appear to apprehend that the Indian Army Defence Committee, in its endeavours for Bonus Compensation, will clash with the operations of another committee, pre-existent for the same object, and rich in "older and more experienced hands." I will only reply that our researches, and the letter which you have published, tend to show that this supposed committee is a simulacrum, if not a sham; that if it contains "old and experienced hands"—and perhaps only one pair of these—the Defence Committee comprises hands still older and more experienced. One of its members served on the original committee, and was busy with this question years before your correspondent put a finger to the work. The Defence Committee had also the pleasure at one time of enrolling your correspondent, who now inveighs against it, on its muster-roll, and concessions, even too liberal, were offered to prevent him from creating a schism by seceding from it.

It would not be well, nor seemly, nor politic, to imitate our assailants by imputations of motives, sown broad-cast. But I will only commend to your correspondent, if he really has the welfare of his brother officers at heart, a great example which he might have nobly imitated. I allude to the old history, with which he is no doubt familiar, of Themistocles serving under the naval orders of Eurybiades, knowing, as Herodotus relates, that if they should quarrel about the command Greece would be lost. The Defence Committee firmly believes that the drift of the petition which was drafted last year and circulated for signatures is mischievous to many officers, and ought to be recast, and, this being our belief, how can we, in common honesty or with hope of good success to our efforts, adopt it?—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, PHILOSTRATUS.

RAILWAY TO SAMBHUR LAKE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I observe in your Paper of last week an announcement that the Government have come to the determination to commence the construction of a State railway from Agra to the Sambhur Lake; and that it is intended, eventually, to extend the railway so as to form a junction with the already existing Bombay railways on the Western frontier. Some few observations on this new development of the railway system in India I venture to make, as its importance may not be apparent to all your readers.

A railway from Agra to the Sambhur Lake would not, I imagine, be considered as any very great addition to the Indian Railway system if the said railway was to have its termination in this particular spot, but the projected scheme being to carry it beyond this, and through the State of Rajpootana and so to the extreme West, the magnitude of the undertaking becomes apparent, and there rises in perspective another great railway, another connecting chain between the thriving mercantile city of Bombay and the North-Western Provinces.

As you mention that a tender has been accepted for the construction of the railway as far as the Sambhur Lake, I imagine the difficulties, to be encountered in making this part of the line have not been found to be very great. The rocky hills which intersect the country here and there, and which might seem to present barriers, can, I suppose, be avoided, and so ere long the "Iron horse" with his string of carriages will make his appearance, and do the work of carriers from the great Salt depot lying in these remote regions, a work which has heretofore been performed by the patient camels and by the Brinjarries with their own wandering herds of bullocks. The next section of the railway will, I imagine, have its course in a westerly or south-westerly direction, and make a passage somewhere through the hills that lie on the confines of the Ajmere district, and into the territory of Marwar—a tract of country belonging to the independent State of Joudpore. The difficulties on this part of the line may be great, but still they may not be insurmountable. Once clear of the hills however, and into the great plain of Marwar, difficulties vanish, and the engineer has before him a wide expanse of open country, level almost as the sandy sea-shore. Here rails could be laid down and the whole work of construction carried on I should say with American rapidity. At a marvellously small expense too it ought to be accomplished, for the rains being very scanty in this region, nullahs and steep cuttings are hardly met with, so that the bridges and viaducts required must be very few indeed. There is wood too close at hand, and to be had in abundance from the Aravulli range of hills—which for a distance of seventy miles or more extend along the frontier, and form the Southern boundary of the Marwar State. I do not believe in any part of the world could a line of railway be constructed more easily or satisfactorily than here. And there is nothing to prevent its being done cheaply and rapidly. Passing from Marwar the line would enter the Serohi district, and have to thread its way through the lines of rocky hills that form a marked feature of this part of the country. High and formidable as these mountains look however, they present no serious obstacles to the formation of the railway. Roads, tolerably good, pass from one end of the district to the other; and along these tracts, where carriages move to and fro without difficulty, the rails no doubt could be laid down. The course would be, I imagine, under the shadow of the great mountain—Aboo—the monarch of mountains here. Going from Serohi, the direction would be to the cantonment of Deesa, entering at this point the Bombay Presidency.

From Deesa the next section would be to the south, and by the borders of the Gujerat district to the city of Ahmedabad, and thence onwards, to be connected with the lines coming from Bombay. A more favourable country for the formation of a railway there could not be, and, consequently, the work ought to be done at a comparatively small expense. Here, too, other advantages come into view. A grain-producing district has at length been reached, and the country has no longer that dreary, sterile, wild aspect which has been its marked feature all along the tracts traversed by the line from its starting-point at Agra.

And now as to the advantages which this railway would offer when completed. It would be by far the shortest line of communication between Bombay and Agra. A glance at the map will show this, and the great amount of mileage that would be saved by this route compared with that by the Great Indian Peninsular. Inconvenience would be little, if at all, felt by travellers during the rainy season, because the rains are in general scanty in the region of country through which the railway passes. Mount Aboo has been mentioned, and that would be made an accessible spot for all sanitary purposes. The cantonment of a regiment of European soldiers on the plateau to be found on that mountain is an idea that naturally suggests itself to those who have the good of the European soldier at heart. There is ground enough, and suited to the purpose. Where is there a more dreary, desolate, heart-depressing place than the cantonments of Nusseerabad? and is there any reason, strategical or otherwise, why European soldiers should be cantoned there when barracks could be built for them on Mount Aboo, between four thousand and five thousand feet above the level of the sea? There is a proposal of a branch railway to Nusseerabad, but I fail to see any great advantage that would accrue from such additional outlay, as the country through which it would pass produces next to nothing, and its use would be simply a line of communication to the cantonment. But a great and crowning benefit from a Rajpootana railway would be this—that it would afford the means of giving relief to districts too often devastated by the ravages of famine. How dire has been the distress from this calamity within these few last years there are numerous records to show; but how greatly would this have been mitigated had there been a railway leading to these parts. How far such railway would be successful as a financial project I am not prepared to state. In its course there would no doubt be found other products besides salt for which a means of transit is required. As a passenger line there is reason to believe it would be a favourite one with Europeans and natives. The "Marwarries" are a very migrating people, and they spread themselves over India, from north to south, in the capacity of merchants and money-dealers. Europeans travelling, via Bombay, to or from the North-Western Provinces would find this the most direct route; being the shortest, it would consequently be patronised as the cheapest.

CARRIAGE OF CHEAP GRAIN.

The Indian Statesman asks if the G. I. P. Railway Company can afford to carry grain at the same rates as the East India Railway? Western India is deeply interested in the answer. If we have given the right equivalents in English currency and weights for the figures supplied by the Oudh Excelsior, the East India Railway Company is able to transport grain, over long distances, at the rate of pice 5.4, or 0.64 pence per ton per mile. Now as a quarter of wheat weighs about 480 lbs., we could, at this rate, bring wheat down from Jubbulpore to Bombay, a distance of 616 miles, for Rs. 3.11, or something less, taking exchange into account, than seven shillings per quarter. At the rate of one-fifth of a pice per maund per mile, a single maund could be brought down for 123 pice, or 10 annas 3 pice. The bearing of these facts upon the food supply of Western India is of immense importance. A month or two ago the price of wheat in the Upper Nerbudda districts was as low as 31 seers per rupee, or Rs 1-4-8 per maund, while throughout Western India the price at the very same time was from three to five times that rate. We venture to think that were the European houses in Bombay to study carefully the price lists of India with a view to taking part in the grain trade of the country they might find themselves independent of the cotton trade altogether. But the question of railway carriage of course lies at the root of the matter. That the East India Railway can carry somewhat cheaper than the lines on this side of India, from having the Ranee-gunge coal-fields at hand for their supply of fuel, is no doubt true, but were some of our leading firms to enter frankly into consultation with Mr. Conder upon the subject, and to make themselves familiar with the resources of the great grain growing districts of the country, we have a strong conviction that we should soon see the prices of food falling very materially in Western India. Thus, at this moment in Chuttesghur, a district of 120 to 180 miles beyond Nagpore, the price of grain is just as low as it was in this Presidency five-and-twenty years ago, the period of our very deepest agricultural depression. The latest quotations from the district as given in the last number of the Indian Economist were as follows:—

	Per rupee.	Per maund.
Rice	32 seers	Rs. 1 4 0
Wheat	35 "	1 2 10
Jowaree	42 "	0 15 3

Contrast these rates with those simultaneously obtaining in the Bombay market:—

And yet there is a railway all the way to Nagpore, three-fourths of the entire distance, and a good useable road beyond it! We cannot but think that our Bombay merchants devote themselves too exclusively to cotton, and that were they a little more enterprising they would not be long in discovering new, and more profitable fields for the employment of their resources. For the last ten years it has been pointed out that a cheap tramway from Nagpore into the heart of the Chutteesghur territory would open out a district enormously rich in natural products, and that the return upon the capital invested in such a work would be immense. The Government has its hands too full to take the matter up immediately, and there is no public spirit in the country to supply its place. This is hardly creditable, we think, to English enterprise.

TRIAL BY JURY.

The Madras Times discusses the advantages to be gained by having Europeans tried in the Mofussil instead of having them brought down to the Presidency. There would be a saving of money. A prisoner who has to be brought down to Madras from some far-off station costs a good sum of money to the state. His travelling expenses have to be paid, and peons have to be sent to guard him. In addition to this there may be any number of witnesses in the case, and they must have their expenses paid both on the journey and during the time they are in Madras; so that a prisoner costs a good sum by the time his trial is over. Then the people who have to go down have to leave their proper duties, whatever those may be, for the time they are away, and as the place may be a long way from the Presidency town it may be a long time before they get back again. We see by this that if a change could be made by which Europeans could be satisfied that justice would be done in the Mofussil courts it would be a good thing. We are willing to own that it is difficult to propose anything that is likely to give universal satisfaction. At the same time we think an attempt might be made to introduce the jury system into the Mofussil Courts in the case of Europeans. If this could be done, the great objection to trying them in those courts would be removed. The great objection that might be made to this would be that there are very few men from which a jury could be drawn. This might be the case in a few of the smallest stations, but we think that in most cases a suitable jury, say of six men, might be found. In several stations a jury as respectable as any the jury of the High Court could easily be brought together. Of course a prisoner if convicted by a jury would have to give up the right of appeal to the High Court. He would stand on exactly the same footing as if he were tried in the High Court itself. The other plan that has been proposed is for the judges of the High Court to go on circuit. We think this would be a very proper thing if it could be carried out. But there is a great difficulty. The judges would have to be away from Madras for so long a time that other judges would have to be appointed to do their work while they were away, and thus the establishment would become very expensive. We think the time has not yet arrived for the judges to adopt the English plan of going on circuit, and till then some other plan must be adopted, and we think it would be well to think about extending the jury system, in the case of Europeans, to the Mofussil Courts.

JOHN FROST AT OOTACAMUND.—Mr. John Frost is amongst our recent arrivals. He has been spreading his white garments here and there in the hollows of the hills at night time, and has only removed them when Old Sol has got up of a morning, and given peremptory orders to that effect. It is rumoured that Mr. Frost's appearance has angered the old gentleman, and there seems some truth in the rumour; for people who have been out of doors during the day lately, and have met him, complain very much of the heat he displays.—South of India Observer.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

STATION No. 7, Jan. 4.—Since the cessation of hostilities on the 29th, large numbers of Loshais daily come into camp, partly influenced by curiosity, but chiefly, I think, bent on doing a little trade with us, by bartering what they have for articles that they take a fancy for, and which happen to be in camp. Salt is the commodity they are fondest of. They are a fine stalwart-looking lot of men, with pleasant jovial-looking faces, as a rule. They are not very tall, the bulk of them being under five feet five inches in height, but they are very muscular, and appear to be capable of any amount of exertion. Their features are decidedly Mongolian in type, but they are not so coarse and heavy-looking as is usual among the hill tribes in these parts, who all belong to the same ethnological family. Their usual dress seems to be a large chaddar, or sheet, thrown over the shoulders, and reaching down to their knees. Many of them have this chaddar of variegated colours, often resembling tartan. The poorer men have it made of coarse cotton, and not nearly so ample as their wealthier brethren. Some of them also wear the dhoti and coats after the Hindu fashion.

Their hair is generally worn long, and carefully parted in the centre. The ends are gathered into a ball, which is fixed at the back of the head with a long metal hair-pin. It is very much the fashion that was in vogue among the ladies twenty years ago. The mantris, or ministers, of a great chieftain have their "back hair" twisted into a tail, which stands up in the air, and is decorated with the plumes of jungle fowl or peacock. It is the most imposing-looking ornament possible, and one of which the wearer seems immensely proud.

Some few men wear the ordinary pagri, but it is not very common. Each man has a bag at his side, slung generally across the shoulders. The sling is made usually of tiger or leopard-skin. The bags are made of network, but they wear a shield of goat, tiger, or bear-skin over it. The shields made of goat-skin are very picturesque, as they have the long hair of the goat hanging down from them. They look for all the world like the bags a Highlander wears in front of him. These bags contain rations, powder, bullets, &c., when they are away from home, hunting, or on the war-path.

About one man in six seems to possess a gun. These are very old-fashioned affairs. Most of them are old Tower-pattern flint guns, with very long wide-bored barrels. I notice that some of the guns bear the date of 1745 upon their barrels. For bullets they use pieces of iron and brass beaten round by a hammer. Heads of nails, stones, and pieces of wire they also seem to put into their guns at times.

Their powder is manufactured in the country by themselves. It is coarse-grained and weak, but this fault they remedy by using very heavy charges. Some of the loaded guns we took were found to have from four to five inches of the barrel loaded with powder. The stocks of these guns are very old-fashioned in shape, and are in many instances apparently manufactured by the Loshais themselves. Those men who are not armed with guns carry iron-tipped spears. They all, moreover, possess daos, in the use of which they are great experts.

The younger men ornament their necks and ears with beads, teeth of animals, and parrots' bills, strung on hempen strings. They seem fond of smoking. Each man carries a pipe made of bamboo, which he fills and puffs away at in European fashion.

Like all savages, they are very curious, and are greatly delighted at seeing the hands of a watch go, and listening to its ticking. They admire our swords and pistols, but do not seem to think much of a rifle; they say their guns are much better, and they would not make an exchange on any account.

The houses in which they live are built of split bamboo made into a thick species of matting. They are raised off the ground on piles, having a set of steps by which they are entered. Inside each house there is a pukka hearth for the fire let into the floor.

Round the walls of the house numerous shelves are placed for holding all kinds of earthen vessels, baskets, and hollow gourds, in which are kept the household goods of the occupants. Their cooking vessels are all made of earth. Many of the houses in Kole were decorated with boars', deer's, and meten's heads, probably in token of the prowess of their owners in the chase. The Loshais keep pigs, goats, fowls, and pigeons. The pigs were in great numbers in all the villages that were burnt. Very few fowls or goats were left; they had evidently been carried off by their owners.

None of the women or children have come into camp, and none were seen in the villages; so I am unable to give any account of them.

This camp has been in occupation now for nearly a week. There are wings of the 44th, 22nd, and 42nd here, and also the Sappers.

All the troops are busy at present on the road, some working on towards the country of Lalburah, and others patching up that towards Tipai Mukh. To-day the wing 44th N.I., under Colonel Nuthall, is to move on about eight miles to the next place, where water is procurable, which is on the river Tuitu.

The Artillery are still at Tipai Mukh, and there is as yet no word of their coming on. Commissariat stores are accumulating here rapidly, so I expect in a few days more we will all be on the move again. The health of the troops and coolies is very fair, considering the amount of exposure and hard work they are necessarily subjected to. Diarrhoea and dysentery are rather more common diseases than they should be, but as yet they are not excessive. They are the principal complaints at present among the men.

It is dreadfully cold here at present. We have now been about six weeks away from civilisation, and are all getting very ragged and dirty-looking. The rations are bad too, at least the beef is, and we have no sauce to taste them up a bit with. Some days ago none of us were able to change our clothes, night or day, for three or four days together. So you see we are roughing it pretty considerably.—Englishman Correspondent.

THE DELHI MANŒUVRES.

BATTLE ON THE 10TH JANUARY.

As I told you before, the attacking force consisted of the 1st and 3rd Divisions, commanded by General Travers, v.c., in chief, and General Tombs under him. The 2nd Division, under General MacMurdo, defended a line between the river and Shahabad, the extreme right being the village of Burora, with the villages of Bhulsood, Budlee, and Hyderpore, as marks for the line. At an early hour the Viceroy's char-a-banc, with four splendid horses, passed down the Delhi and Kurnaul-road, carrying the Countess of Mayo to the front, and from that moment to about two o'clock in the day there was a succession of conveyances of all sorts taking visitors to the scene of action. If you can imagine the road to Epsom in Eastern costume, you may have some notion of the road between Delhi and the front. At Azadpore the two roads, one from the city, the other from the station, join one another and merge into the Grand Trunk-road to Kurnaul, and at this point the traffic was incessant. Carriages and four in numbers, elephants with howdahs and gorgeous trappings, barouches, dog carts, bylies, tattoos, officers on good and bad chargers, Umpires with their white badges of office (for there was to be one with each regiment) by tens, every one who could be there was there. So far as an audience was concerned nothing was wanting. And what went they out for to see? A reed shaken by the wind, a prophet, or what? What they went to see was a battle which was to last two, if not three days. What they did see was a whole battle finished in one day's fighting, and something very like a Sedan. There is no doubt that General MacMurdo had, either in obedience to orders, or of his own will, occupied a line of far greater extent than his force could occupy except immediately to retire from it. But he proposed to make a stay there instead of retiring at once upon the Ridge, and there defying, as he might have done, the entrance into Delhi. With this end he, before the day of battle, placed guns in a strongly-entrenched position at Buraree, dug rifle pits and shelter trenches, and altogether did his best to strengthen the position. But on the day of the fight the Umpires declared these works, having been previously made, must be given up; the consequence was they came in very handy for the enemy, who, of course, freely availed themselves of such advantages. There was no doubt about their right to do so. The result was that, although the enemy intended to make a false attack on General MacMurdo's right, and the real attack on his left, they gained so much on the right that they immediately turned it into a real attack, with the following result. The 40th Regiment W.S., the 1st Goorkhas, and the band and colours of the 92nd Gordon Highlanders, were all captured, in addition to three troops of the 11th Hussars. Colonel Fraser had three chargers killed or disabled under him in his energetic efforts to turn the tide of victory, but he only succeeded in making a tremendous charge against some of his own division, in which one native soldier was hurt. In vain aides-de-camp, gallopers, and quartermasters-general were sent to bring up reserves, to rally the broken line, to explain and expound the law to Umpires. It availed nothing. When night came on, and we got to our tents and baggage, and sat round the camp fire and talked of the day's fight, we knew it was all over, that there was nothing really between General Travers and Delhi, and that there could be no further battle to-morrow.

BATTLE OF THE 12TH JANUARY.—GENERAL TOMBS AGAIN SUCCESSFUL.

The preparations for the battle on the Ridge, from which General Tombs was to be driven with his division across the Jumna, began on Friday night. Between midnight and one o'clock there were signs of the coming struggle along the road leaving old Cantonments towards the famous Badlee-ka-Serai. Close along the canal might have been seen the 35th regiment N.I. bivouacking round camp fires along the escape channel of the canal. A little further on the pontoon train with its guard of sappers was steadily pushing on for the river, where it passes the Ridge, to make a bridge for General Tombs's Division to retire across the Jumna when the Ridge should become no longer tenable. After them a long train of commissariat camels with sulky drivers, who don't like the Camp work, and would like, if they dare, to make a bolt of it with their camels, and return only for the regular marching work when there is plenty to get and little to do; and then we are opposite General MacMurdo's little camp, the Head Quarters of the 2nd Division. Lights appear to be out and nothing stirring; but it is not so. The two Generals have up to a late hour been planning the attack for to-morrow, and on the General's return orders have to be sent out to both his brigades. An orderly officer is just leaving camp on a midnight gallop to find out the 2nd brigade and tell them to break camp at daybreak and be ready to march at eight o'clock. It is not an easy camp to find this dark night, and unless he is lucky in hitting it off, there won't be much sleep for our young gallopper. Perhaps the judicious use of the sleeping hours is altogether the most difficult part of the soldier's duty to learn; so much can be done quietly for good in these hours, so much rest disturbed by an injudicious use of the night. By order of the Commander-in-Chief himself no night attacks are to be made without his express permission, which has not yet been accorded, but it is possible to move a considerable portion of the heavy baggage of an army during the night to a safe spot in the rear, and thus leave a very small camp to be removed at daybreak. In this way the roads are kept clear for the movements of the troops. Every possible camp follower and baggage-animal should leave their respective camps at night so as to avoid cumbering the roads during the day; for, reduce it as much as you will in India, and, I fancy, everywhere, there will always be a certain amount of excess and semi-combatative addenda which require to be got out of the way. There seems to be required an officer of what I should call the "Bundobust" Department with every division, who should know what all the other staff are doing, where all the regiments and detachments are situated, and who would see that all work together in harmony and without contradictory instructions from different departments. There is also room to improve or rather to make more extensive use of the signalling department. General McMurdo, so far as it has been placed in his power, has utilised the signallers, but I suppose from motives of economy very few have been allowed, and the field telegraphy covers very little ground owing to the same cause. There is no doubt that we require celerity in the issue and reception of orders, more perhaps than anything else. Here lies the secret of keeping the troops unharassed by standing about accoutred for hours before they will be required, and of allowing them the utmost possible amount of ease and rest. But it must not be thought for a moment that I am writing in disapprobation of what has been done. The improvement on the old style of doing things, even in this first camp, is marvellous, and I feel sure that by developing the system further we shall have a simple and complete mode of conducting the affairs of large forces in the field; and as nothing can be done without the sanction of Government, it is, to secure that sanction, necessary to show how desirable increased efficiency is in the intelligence department, in which include thorough communication between the forces of an army in the field as well as a knowledge of the enemy's doing. On Saturday we had no doubt the best fight the camp has yet witnessed. For the benefit of your readers who are not up in Delhi geography, or history, I may say that "the Ridge" is a rocky elevation just outside Delhi, on which were situated in 1857 the line of outposts commanded by General Reid, who made the Simoor Rifles famous in history. On this Ridge General Tombs took up a strong position, extending down as far as the bridge over the escape channel, where he placed the 20th P.I. — a corps celebrated up here for its good work on many campaigns. This time the attacking force was the division of General Travers, added to that of General McMurdo, the former officer commanding the left and in chief, General McMurdo commanding the right. The advance was cleverly made, the troops being divided, and taken up under cover of gardens, nullahs, and circuitous roads, so as to be quite sheltered up to the last moment, and then thrown with immense force on General Tombs's position. Indeed, had the left under General Travers moved as quickly as the right under General McMurdo, it is doubtful whether the whole of General Tombs's force would not have been taken prisoners. As it was, the 72nd Highlanders were taken prisoners, but the rest of the force performed the retreat across the river in excellent order. General Tombs was much praised, I believe, for the manner in which he defended his position by entrenchments, and for the regularity of all his movements, and altogether Saturday may be considered to have been the most successful of the battles yet fought. The manner in which the Gordon Highlanders went on to the attack was, I believe, something to see, and a brigade under Colonel Ross, of the 14th Sikhs, was also distinguished. Of course, it is impossible yet to expect that commanding officers can understand with sufficient force that their regiments are being annihilated while they remain doing nothing. In these first series of manœuvres on the Umpire system, it is impossible to expect a just appreciation of danger. To the men, and of course to natives, the system is very bewildering, but if when they leave this some effort is made to conduct intelligent parades with Umpires and opposing forces, on the next assembly of a Camp of Exercise, we shall commence operations with every one understanding what is meant, and seeing for themselves that they are occupying untenable positions. There is no doubt that these fights are admirably calculated to draw out the intelligence of privates as well as officers, and to make them take an interest in their work; but unless the lessons commenced here are carried on elsewhere, and unless there is a certainty of regiments frequenting these Camps at no great intervals, the native portion, at all events, of the army will relapse into a condition worse than the first. And here let me say a word about regiments broken up by detachment duty, and ask that some method should be contrived to prevent their falling off to the extent which now seems actually sanctioned. "What a slovenly corps the Queen's are," says somebody. "Oh, they have been on detachment duty, you know, and the wonder is they pull through half so well." How far is this excuse to be allowed? If it is so to the present extent, I think there ought to be some remedy for detachments altogether, for it can be no portion of military duty to make a corps unfit to take the field. The remedy seems to lay between the two. Many detachments might be done away with as quite unnecessary, and those actually required should be changed frequently and visited often. To the present extent detachment duty should not cover multitudes of sins.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

LEGAL.—Mr. J. E. Howard was enrolled as an Advocate of the High Court, N. W. P., on the 11th January.

JUMNA RAILWAY BRIDGE.—On the evening of Jan. 18 was laid the foundation of the first pier of the Jumna Railway Bridge at Agra, on the east side of the river.

OPIMUM.—We hear that a correspondence is now going on regarding the cultivation of poppy on the hill tract of Jownsar Bawa Pargunnah in the Dehra Dhoon district.—Indian Daily News.

EDUCATIONAL.—Under section 12 of Act 11 of 1857 the Governor-General in Council has authorised the affiliation in Arts, up to the standard of the First Arts Examination of the London Mission School, Mirzapore, to the Calcutta University.

THE KUPURTHALA CHIEF.—Mr. Davies, the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab, paid a visit on the 1st of January to the Rajah of Kupurthala, and was received in splendid style at the capital. Visits and presents were exchanged, and every effort seems to have been made to do honour to his distinguished friend.

AN APPEAL FOR PITY.—The Zemindars of the Jat tribe of Manjha, we are told by a native paper, have composed a song in the Punjabee dialect, which they sing at fairs and on other public occasions, in order to excite the compassion of the authorities for the oppression said to be practised upon them by the irrigation department.

IRRIGATION.—The Secretary of State has sanctioned the immediate commencement of the Sardah Canal project in its lately modified form—a project for the irrigation of all the higher and drier portion of the province of Oudh, from Nuglah, near Burmdeo, to Lucknow, Fyzabad, and Shahjehanpore.

THE GUGGER BRIDGE.—We are given to understand that the bridge over the Gugger has given way once more. This is very unfortunate, considering that troops are being sent up by train to Kotela. The bridge must have been shamefully constructed, that it could not stand the recent rains.—Mofussilite.

MILITARY.—In consequence of the illness of Brigadier Fraser, V.C. and C.B., Commanding the Cavalry of the 1st Division at the Camp of Exercise, Delhi, the command of the brigade has been assigned to Colonel Frith, Royal Horse Artillery, the next senior officer of the brigade.

THE USE OF PUSHTU.—The resolution lately published by the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab, in which he intimated that in future officers holding important posts in the districts in which Pushtu is the vernacular must in future have a good colloquial knowledge of that tongue, is already having effect apparently, for we notice a letter in the Punjab paper in which the correspondent inquires what are the best primary Pushtoo books. Major Raverty's are among the best, we believe.

THE HON. MR. COCKERELL.—It is gratifying to see that Mr. F. R. Cockerell has, on the expiry of his second term of service, been again reappointed to a seat in the Council of the Governor-General for making laws and regulations. No one has contributed, in an important degree, more than this gentleman to the process of consolidation with which, for some years past, the Government of India has been so busily employed, and which is now in so fair a way towards completion. Mr. Cockerell is one of the few people who know their way with accuracy about the tangled jungle of regulations which has been for so long the despair of all Indian lawyers; and it is owing in no small degree to his accuracy, diligence, and zeal, that this work of repeal, amendment, and consolidation has been hitherto carried out without inconvenience either to Government or the public. It would have been a matter for real regret had Mr. Cockerell left the Council before his unusual acquirements and ripe experience had been fully utilised in completing the task in which he assisted throughout its earlier and more difficult stages. Several portions of the Regulation Law—such, for instance, as those which deal with the subject of mortgages, land revenue, and the responsibilities of landholders—urgently need revision, and there is no one in the service so competent as himself to prepare the enactments which would replace the repealed law on these subjects. His reappointment to the Council, after four years of service in it, is no doubt exceptional; but it is a well-deserved compliment, and will, we have no doubt, prove of public advantage.—Englishman.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO MAJOR RUSSEL.—We record, with much regret, a fatal accident to Major Russel, lately doing general duty at Jubbulpore. He was on duty on the night of Monday, the Jan. 15, and early on Tuesday morning his body was found lying on the road, not far from the theatre. He had visited his guards soon after midnight, and is said to have been perfectly sober; he ordered two men of one of the guards to be confined for some fault. He appears to have had no horsekeeper with him; the horse, a vicious one, was found at dawn, when the body was discovered, feeding in a neighbouring compound. There was a large pool of blood on the road under the Major's head; his forage cap and the horse's saddle are missing, but nothing seems to have been taken from his person. A court of inquest is sitting to investigate the cause of death, of which, however, there at present seems no doubt but that it was caused by a fall from his horse. There is a mark on the ground as though the deceased officer had been dragged on his hands some yards along the centre of the pucca road.—Pioneer.

COLONEL FRASER.—I am sorry to have bad news to give you. It has just reached me, so I think it best to let you know at once, as the event, I feel certain, will occasion universal regret to all who know him. Poor Colonel Fraser, 11th Hussars, after all the anxiety and excitement of the last month, has been knocked over. It appears that last year he got rather a serious fall on his head on parade, and this, combined with want of sleep (of which he has had but two hours a night for the last ten days, his labours having been most arduous, and he most indefatigable in their performance), has brought on affection of the brain. I am glad to say, however, that he is not believed to be in danger, but I am afraid he will not again be fit for work, and will therefore have to be sent home. I am certain his loss will be felt by all, for he was a most kind and hospitable gentleman and true soldier, as the state of his regiment testifies to. I hear Colonel Roberts, of the 17th, has seen the last of his command, but no orders have yet been issued on the subject, or as to who is to succeed him in the command.—Pioneer Correspondent.

HIGH EDUCATION IN THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.—The long-threatened blow has at last fallen on high English education in the N.W.P. In the N.W.P. Gazette of Jan. 13 last the revised scheme of scholarships for the N.W.P. is published. Hitherto all students, who passed the F.A. examination and continued to read for the B.A., received assistance and encouragement in the shape of a Government scholarship. By the new order only four scholarships are allowed yearly to those who pass the F.A. and continue their studies for the B.A. degree. Only four in the whole N.W.P.! In the last F.A. examination sixteen candidates passed from the N.W.P., who would probably nearly all have read for the B.A.—not half-a-dozen of those will possibly now persevere. Of course this step is only preliminary to abolishing the English colleges, as it would be folly to keep up an expensive staff of professors and principals who have no pupils to teach. We regret it much, and at the same time are much surprised at the haste with which such an important order was passed. We cannot think it possible that the Government fail to see the effect of this false economy. There is much grim humour, however, in the new scheme, which sanctions any number of scholarships to M.A. students, seeing that no one can take the M.A. who has not first passed the B.A. examination.—Pioneer.

THE KING OF SIAM IN CALCUTTA.—CALCUTTA, Jan. 14.—A small, slim, slightly-built, and by no means imposing, but withal a quiet, gentlemanly, and self-possessed young man, in a French uniform and Mongolian features. That is the King of Siam. In India, where Portuguese clerks and Bengali Babus have familiarised everybody with the ludicrous aspect of European costume, it is simply perilous for anyone who is not born thereto to occupy breeches and tunics. Nevertheless, his Siamese Majesty did not look at all absurd—which is an additional proof of the divine right of kings to do wrong. This means, of course, nothing more or less than that birth is recognisable under any conceivable disguise. There was a quiet dignity in the words and gestures of the Viceroy's guest which showed very plainly that he was accustomed to be treated with respect. He would probably have created a greater stir if he had appeared in the national costume of his country, and I am told that he was strongly advised to do so, and only refrained from acting up to the advice from a mistaken sense of the superiority of Western over Eastern civilisation. I call it a mistaken sense, not because the feeling which underlies it is false, but simply because the natural promptings of the feeling have been wrongly applied in this visit to India, where Englishmen, who are courteous enough to good blood in indigenous attire, are prone to resent, or to laugh at, assumptions of the externals of Western civilisation on the part of people to whom the internals have been denied by predestination. By the way, is not the King of Siam as much a King in his own way as the sovereign of England is a Queen in hers? It was observed at the reception that the Viceroy did not address the King as representatives of the Queen usually address reigning sovereigns, but as "your Royal Highness," as though he were only an heir apparent to a throne. No doubt this was all according to Hoyle, and I do not for a moment imagine that the Viceroy is at all deficient in the science of playing with kings; but I regret to say that I am profoundly ignorant of the history and court etiquette of Siam, and do not understand the terms of the address. To the surprise of many persons the King spoke rather purer English than a great many Scotchmen and Irishmen in India and elsewhere usually speak. He returned thanks very briefly for Lord Mayo's courteous welcome to Queen Victoria's Empire in the East, and then fell into a mumbled conversation of which no one could catch anything, if anyone tried. A large number of persons who applied for tickets were disappointed. I was told last evening that 4,000 people had applied for tickets, but that only 3,000 tickets had been issued. This morning I learn on equally good authority, i.e., both the authorities being equally bad, that 1,300 tickets were issued, the latter seems nearer the mark. No one looking round the room would have thought that more than 1,300, or at the outside 1,500, people were present. Lady Mayo occupied a quiet corner in the place, as one may say, a sort of non-official spectator of the scene. All the tall poppies of Calcutta society, some fifty in number, were presented one after another to the King, after which the short poppies fled out, and the visitor proceeded to the large house in Wood-street, which had previously been engaged as his residence. There was a tremendous crowd round Government House all the afternoon, and business was for a time suspended. The above is not intended as a report of the reception; so please accept it only as a bird's eye-view of what occurred.—Pioneer Correspondent.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Jan. 19.—Our market has continued to improve, and during the past week a fair business has been done in staples at advancing rates.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Jan. 19.—Jute: The demand for all descriptions has been active, and has caused the rates here to continue very firm. Saltpetre: The demand for Europe has increased, and a rise has taken place in Calcutta-washed, 5 per cent. refraction, of one anna. Rice: There has been another rise in fine Table kinds owing to a large demand for shipment for Australia. Linseed: The demand has been principally confined to bold; the prospects of the growing crop are favourable. Raw Silk: The only transactions reported are some bales of native rainy brand at Tis. 12 to 13, and a small lot of Moysespoore flatur: at Tis. 19. The accounts of the November band are still unfavourable, but no sales have as yet taken place, owing to the high rate asked by growers.

Madras.

ELEPHANTS.—A Bill has been introduced into the Madras Council “for the prevention of indiscriminate destruction of elephants.”

SIR MADAVA RAO.—Sir Madava Rao is about to commence coffee growing, and for that purpose has purchased an extensive coffee estate near Neduvangaud.

OPENING OF A NEW STATION.—A Madras contemporary states that the Viceroy has been asked to open the new central station of the Madras Railway, and that his Excellency has consented to do so.

THE EARL OF SELKIRK.—The Earl of Selkirk arrived at Madras, by the steamer Burmah, on Wednesday, Jan. 17. One of Lord Napier's aides-a camp went on board the steamer and took the Earl to Government-house.

MAJOR SLADEN.—The Rangoon papers believe that Major Sladen's actual destination in Burmah will be the Amherst district, the present Deputy-commissioner, Colonel Ryan, being about to take two years' furlough.

DUTY ON SALT FISH.—With reference to the financial resolution of the Supreme Government, directing the levy of an import duty on salted fish, the Governments of Madras and Bombay are said to have raised certain objections to the impost.

ILLNESS OF COLONEL ROE.—Colonel Roe, the Adjutant-General of the Madras Army, has been rather seriously ill from the effects of a sunstroke, believed to have been got at the Red Hills regatta on Dec. 30. He is now somewhat better, but is still very unwell.

ACCIDENT TO MAJOR GRAY.—We regret to learn that Major Gray, H.M.'s 16th Regiment, N.I., is now lying at Bellary in a very precarious state, having ruptured a blood vessel. Dr. Harper, the garrison surgeon, and Dr. Thompson, have been in attendance, and are indefatigable in their efforts to relieve the patient. We sincerely hope that Major Gray may soon be restored to health and strength, and that we shall be able to report more favourably in a few days' time.—Madras Athenæum.

MUNICIPAL TAXATION AT BANGALORE.—We understand that at the meeting of the Municipal Board on Wednesday last, there was a great deal of talk about increasing local taxation in order to meet the additional charges saddled on the town. Money is undoubtedly wanted, but why do not the Board call on the Madras Government, as we have more than once urged before, to show cause why it should not pay house-tax on the numerous buildings belonging to it in Bangalore. To our mind it is scandalous that additional taxes should be even dreamt of, whilst one great defaulter is allowed to go scot-free. It is a pity the Board has no legal adviser to guide its steps and tell it how to act.—Bangalore Herald.

THE EARL OF WICKLOW.—The Pudukottah correspondent of the Trichinopoly papers writes:—“We have at present a noble visitor here in the person of the Earl of Wicklow. The noble Earl is a young man of very unassuming appearance, and the object of his visit to the Tondiman Prince is apparently hunting. He arrived here on the morning of Sunday last. His Excellency the Maharajah received the Earl in full durbar held for the occasion, and both at his coming to and departure from the durbar salutes were fired and all honours befitting the rank of the visitor shown. Yesterday his Excellency invited the Earl to a hunting excursion in the Kudmya Mallai hills, about ten miles from the town, and arrangements have been made to entertain him this morning with the exciting sport of cheeta hunting. The Earl will probably remain here till Thursday next, during which time his Excellency will entertain him with his usual liberality and munificence, and with a series of nautes, &c.”

IRRIGATION.—With reference to the neglect of the village tanks in Madras, the Indian Statesman regrets that, while famine is constantly devastating the land, and vast and costly schemes of irrigation are dragging their weary length through Council, the simple and inexpensive task of cleaning out the village tanks of the country is wholly neglected, although they are year by year becoming more useless and less reliable for the people's wants. The pernicious effects moreover of allowing the ryot all over the country to drink stagnant, and in hot weather, really putrid water, out of tanks that have for years been the receptacles of every form of impurity, seem quite overlooked. The exhalations from such water cannot but be injurious in the highest degree. As to the people concerning themselves in the matter, it is no uncommon sight, as a contemporary points out, to see them looking on with indifference while the cattle are browsing on their choicest crops.

GYMNASTICS.—We see it stated that the Madras Government are desirous of establishing gymnasia in all the military stations of the Presidency, and that a sum of Rs. 25,000 has been sanctioned for this purpose for the current year.

HARD LINES.—The officers of a native regiment in Madras have complained to the local Government that, under the Towns Improvement Act, they have been made to pay tax for their horses though bona fide chargers. The Government have replied that it is not competent to them to order their exemption.

THE NEW YEAR BALL AT MADRAS.—The usual New Year ball at the Banqueting Hall came off on the night of Thursday last. The attendance was unusually large, owing perhaps to the circumstance that this was the last Government ball at which his Excellency and Lady Napier would probably be present. On this occasion however it was regretted on all hands that Lady Napier was not present in the hall. Lord Napier and suite arrived at a little after nine o'clock. Dancing, however, did not begin till ten, when his Highness the Prince of Arcot came, and was received by his Lordship with the usual ceremony. Dancing was after this kept up with great spirit till half-past twelve, when his Excellency led the way, supporting the Prince of Arcot, to the supper tables. Lord Napier proposed the usual toast. In proposing the health of her Majesty the Queen, his Excellency said that it had been his privilege on occasions of festivity like the present to lead the cheers of assembled guests, but on this occasion he felt it a very great privilege indeed to be able to do so, at a time when the recollection of threatened danger and of a deliverance was fresh in the minds of her Majesty's loyal subjects. After alluding to the feeling of anxiety on the part of the Queen, and to the feelings of sympathy and joy that had been evoked among her Majesty's subjects in all parts of the world, his Excellency proposed the health of the Queen, hoped that such dangers as had just been passed through would long be strangers to the Royal Family. Her Majesty's health was enthusiastically drunk with three cheers, and one cheer more, which was proposed by his Excellency. During the delivery of the short speech by Lord Napier profound silence prevailed at all the tables. After supper, dancing was resumed and continued till after two o'clock in the morning.—Madras Times.

THE RAO OF CUTCH.—Major-General Sir W. Edward Russell, K.C.S.I., Colonel Sir Henry Green, C.B., K.C.S.I., Mr. G. S. V. Fitzgerald, Private Secretary to H.E. the Governor, and Captain Ewart, His Excellency's Aide-de-Camp, proceeded to the Mandvee on Tuesday evening by the steamer May Frere, to convey to H.H. the Rao of Cutch the Insignia of the Order of the Knight Grand Commander of the most exalted Order of the Star of India.

REWARD OF MERIT.—His Excellency the Viceroy has been pleased to confer the title of "Rao Bahadur" as a personal distinction upon Mr. Bechurdass Ambaeedass of Ahmedabad, in the Bombay Presidency, in recognition of the public spirit and philanthropy displayed by that gentleman in ameliorating the condition of the females of his caste, whereby the crime of infanticide amongst them has been considerably lessened.

MR. KNIGHT'S NEW JOURNAL.—We find the great body of advertisers in our columns so urgent in the wish that we should follow the example of our contemporaries, and devote the outside pages of the journal to their wants, that we are obliged reluctantly to defer thereto. As intimated in our first issue, we cannot settle the final form of the Indian Statesman until the arrival of the machinery which we have ordered from home. Our readers will therefore kindly understand that the present form of the journal is provisional only. A month or two's experience of the wants we have to meet will enable us to settle the shape of the journal definitely, and in the meanwhile we should be glad of any suggestions which our readers may be able to give us.—The Indian Statesman.

RATEPAYERS' MEETING.—On Thursday evening a meeting of the ratepayers was held in the Cowasjee Framjee Institute for the purpose of considering the reply given by the Government of Bombay to their memorial. Mr. Macdonald presided over a full assembly, and in the course of a few remarks stated that he considered Government's reply polite but unsatisfactory, and it had been resolved by the ratepayers' committee to step over the heads of the local Government and lay their case before the Government of India. The meeting adopted motions endorsing the chairman's views, and after some discussion, in the course of which Mr. Hope's financial reductions were condemned and defended, the ratepayers separated. The meeting was very orderly.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 22.

FATAL ATTACK BY PRISONERS IN THE BHOWNUGGER JAIL.—We have received the following account of a desperate attempt made by prisoners in the Bhownugger Jail to liberate themselves by simultaneously planning an attack on the sepoys in charge. The attempt, however, was unsuccessful, but at the cost of fifteen lives. On the 15th inst., at about five o'clock in the evening, a large number of prisoners in the jail, having previously conspired, rushed at once on the guards in the inner wall, and possessing themselves of the muskets of the latter, rapidly fired on them. Intelligence of the outbreak soon reached the authorities, when some soldiers of the line, together with ten city police and the troops of the Russaleh, were despatched to the jail. The prisoners, however, having some ammunition with them, resisted with determination, and wounded several of the sepoys, killing two. Seeing this state of affairs, the jail authorities took precautions at once to prevent any of the prisoners from escaping; but the conspirators, it appears, were prepared for this. A large number of them then began to pull down a portion of the outer wall, and succeeded in making a large hole, while the others jumped into a large swimming-bath attached to the jail, and thence continued to fire on the guards. The commander of the sepoys, seeing the prisoners getting the upper hand, resolved to make a rush, and ordered ten soldiers of the line to enter the precincts of the jail with two small cannon; having done so, and simultaneously charged ten prisoners, the troops succeeded in scattering them, who were then soon captured. Thirteen of the prisoners were killed, and two severely wounded. The assault and skirmish lasted nearly five hours, and it took another hour to capture the runaways. Some Europeans are said to have shown very great courage during the affair.—Times of India.

KURRACHEE HARBOUR WORKS.—Every one who is conversant with the Kurrachee Harbour Works question and the amount of Imperial funds that have been expended in the improvement of Kurrachee Harbour and the deepening of the channels will be glad to learn that we are enabled to state, on the very best authority, that an immense improvement in the harbour and channels to it has resulted from the works undertaken by the Imperial Government after the designs of the late Mr. Walker. The chief work hitherto carried out has been the Keanmaree Groyne, which runs from Keanmaree Point a distance of nearly a mile and a-half in a direction right down the harbour. The work at present in progress is the Manora breakwater. Rapid progress is being made with this. It is a first-rate specimen of what a breakwater should be. Before the monsoon set in last year 260 feet in length were completed. From the vigorous manner in which the work is being pushed forward, it is expected that a total length of 700 feet will be reached before the south-west monsoon sets in this year. The Western Channel, that close under Manora, now carries fourteen feet draught at dead low water throughout its length. This channel, which is the direct and natural one into the harbour, continues steadily to improve. There is no necessity now for ships to use any longer the old Eastern Channel, which was like the letter S almost. This Eastern Channel formerly carried the deepest water, and all heavily-draughted ships had to pass through it, and the aid of a steamer was necessary both on entering and leaving port. The deepening of the Western Channel has enabled all vessels now to disengage with steam towage inwards; unless, indeed, the wind blows strong out of the harbour. It is reported that the buoys in the Eastern Channel, which were formerly indispensable to safe navigation, are to be removed this season as being no longer required.—Bombay Gazette.

Official Papers.

REPLY TO THE CIVILIANS' MEMORIAL.

From E. C. Bayley, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, to J. H. Fisher, Esq., Secretary to the Central Civilians' Committee, Allahabad.

Home Department (Public), Fort William, Dec. 30, 1871.

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Under-Secretary Geoghegan's letter to your address, No. 2892, dated June 10 last, I am directed now to reply to the memorial from certain members of the Bengal Civil Service, praying—

1. For the restoration of the rate of acting allowance to 30 per cent.
 2. For the restoration of the minimum furlough allowance of £500 per annum.

3. For employment in the Non-Regulation Provinces and in the Political Department.

4. For permission to take privilege leave three months instead of six months before furlough.

2. On the first point the Governor general in Council feels satisfied that no change is necessary. So far as it has been possible to ascertain, it appears that, even with the reduction from 30 to 20 per cent., the junior civilians are drawing on the whole better, and not worse, pay than if the old rules had remained in force; and the protection afforded by the rule that the acting allowance shall not be less than two-thirds of the difference between the pay of the appointment or grade and the pay of the officiating officer, ordinarily secures individuals against any but every trifling loss.

3. As regards the second point, I am to observe that before the memorial was received, the question of the minimum furlough allowance was decided in favour of the service.

4. On the third point I am to state that the Governor general in Council can make no specific promises. Any relief that he could give to the service by appointments in his gift would be very small, while in every appointment the fitness of the individual must be more considered than the claims of the service at large, however urgent they may be. Still his Excellency in Council would be glad to see members of the covenanted civil service more extensively employed in the non-regulation provinces, and in the political and other departments of the State; and I am to acquaint you that stringent orders were issued last year to the local Governments and administrations in the Bengal Presidency to give effect to these views, so far as the non-regulation provinces are concerned. His Excellency in Council will further address the local Governments with a view to the employment in special departments of members of the civil service who possess the necessary qualifications, so far as this can be done without injustice to the claims of gentlemen already employed in such departments.

It is understood, however, that the Lieut. governor of the North-Western Provinces has on more than one occasion recently bestowed on covenanted civilians appointments not reserved exclusively to the service, and, with reference to the present admitted stagnation of promotion, the Governor general in Council hopes that his Honour will be able to find other similar opportunities.

5. As to the last point, the Governor general in Council has determined to accede to the prayer of the memorialists. This concession will be, of course, of general application, and will be notified in the financial department.

COTTON-GIN TRIALS.

The second series of cotton-gin trials commenced in Manchester on the 15th ult., and were brought to a conclusion last Saturday. The object of the second series was chiefly to allow manufacturers to profit by the experience which the first trials had afforded them, and to test the value of any improvements which this experience had enabled them to effect. It not unfrequently happened that a gin based on a correct principle was imperfect by reason of some defect in a matter of detail, and on the other hand that much skill in contrivance and in workmanship was expended upon a principle essentially unsound.

The most remarkable of the machines which have been modified for the second trials is undoubtedly the knife roller gin, of Messrs. Dobson and Barlow, which has been altered in several particulars, and has had its speed of working greatly increased. This gin consists of a horizontal spindle on which circular knives, comparable to quoits, are set obliquely at short intervals. As the spindle revolves, the knives pass just clear of a horizontal bar placed above them, in front of which is a Macarthy roller, and, as the cotton fibre is drawn out, the seeds fall down through the intervals between the blades. The alterations made in this gin, which are entirely the result of its having worked for several days under the observation of the manufacturers, consist chiefly in a change in the width of the blades, and in the degree of their obliquity to the spindle. Pegs also have been placed in the intervals between them, in order better to distribute the feed; and the construction of the Macarthy roller has been modified with a view to increased durability. The original roller was built up of discs of leather placed at right angles to their axis; but in the new one the discs are placed obliquely, like the blades, and it is hoped that this arrangement will enable the roller to retain longer the slight roughness of surface which materially assists it in holding and drawing out the fibre. A system of outside screws has been added, by which the relative distances apart of the blades, bar, and roller can be modified very speedily, without stopping the machine, and the construction of the feed-board has likewise been somewhat altered. It will be highly interesting, when Dr. Forbes Watson's Report is made public, to observe the changes in the quantity and quality of work which these various modifications have effected.

Dr. Forbes, the superintendent of the Government factory at Dharwar, has ordered one of the saw gins under his charge to be fitted with a roller and continuous wire saw like that of Cooper's gin, exhibited by Messrs. Garnett. The result has as yet only been imperfectly tested, but it seems likely to afford a machine in which any breakages may be repaired with extreme readiness, and by the hands of ordinary workmen.

Among the gins which make their first appearance in the second series of trials are two small hand churkas and an Emery's saw gin. The latter is provided with a condenser, or pair of rollers between which the issuing fibre is received and flattened into a coherent substance, so that it falls upon the ground instead of being blown to some distance by the draught of the machine.

Until the quality of the fibre turned out by the various gins has been fully tested and reported upon, it would be premature to arrive at any conclusion with regard to their respective merits. But the trials have at least rendered it certain that in point of quantity of work the best saw gins have been beaten by more than one form of roller gin; and also that one particular roller gin has in this respect come prominently to the front, and has distanced all competitors. The prevailing belief is that the teeth of the saw gins are apt to lacerate and injure the fibre; and, if this belief should be shown to be well founded, it is manifest that they must before long be almost entirely superseded.

Besides the gin trials, experiments have been conducted in order to test the degree of pressure to which raw cotton may be subjected without risk of crushing the seed, and without injury to the fibre. Some of the Dharwar samples have been compressed to the extent of getting 44lb. weight into a cubic foot; and it is believed, from the appearance of the outside portions that no harm has thus been done. The issue raised is an important one, because it is probable that, if raw cotton can be sufficiently compressed for easy freight, it will be found economical to have it ginned by the manufacturer rather than by the producer. The American seeds, and the seeds of Indian cotton of American descent, retain a large proportion of their fibre under any method of ginning, and retain as much as one quarter of the whole when imperfectly ginned upon the estates. This retained fibre would be of great value to paper manufacturers, by whom American seed is now actually imported. If the raw cotton were itself imported, the ginning might be effected by manufacturers in the best possible way, and the seed would be at once available—first, for the purposes of the paper manufacturer, and then as a source of supply of oil and of oil cake. The husk, to which the fibre is adherent, would also have a definite, though small value as a manure.

The trials have excited considerable interest in Manchester, and on the 26th ult. Mr. Hugh Mason, the President of the Chamber of Commerce, gave a dinner to Dr. Forbes Watson and to Major-General Cotton, C.S.I., who has been associated with him in conducting them. About seventy gentlemen sat down, among whom were Sir J. W. Kaye, Political Secretary to the Council of India; Sir E. W. Watkin, Mr. C. E. Cawley, M.P.; Mr. Forwood, the President of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce; the Mayors of Manchester and Salford, the President and Secretary of the Cotton Supply Association, and many of the leading merchants of the city. In returning thanks for the toast to his health, Dr. Forbes Watson entered at length into the manner of the trials, and dwelt upon the various causes which were tending to increase cotton production in India. He referred to the increased facilities for transit by which not only the produce of the interior was brought more easily to the coast, but the agents of the commercial houses in Bombay and other trade centres were enabled to penetrate into the country, and to establish direct relations with the producers. He said that the action of the Cotton Supply Association had been most beneficial, both in its direct operations and also through its various representations to the Government; and he dwelt upon the degree in which augmentation of production had become a question of agricultural improvement. He believed that the Agricultural Department, recently established by the Indian Government, was calculated to be of the greatest service; and paid a high tribute to the ability, knowledge, and energy of Mr. Hume, who has been selected by Lord Mayo to preside over the Department. It was feared by some that the Indian Agricultural Office would be overwhelmed with work not properly falling within its province, but Dr. Forbes Watson explained that this was not likely to be the case. Other departments had, indeed, been placed in official subordination to it, but they were previously fully organised and working smoothly, and would really form no hindrance to the performance of the peculiar functions of the chief department. The trials now in progress, when completed, would leave only one point in doubt, and that was whether a roller gin could clean American cotton in its fresh state. Before concluding, Dr. Forbes Watson referred to some of the Indian officers who had been active in promoting the industrial prosperity of India; and, in this relation, dwelt especially upon the services of Captain Rivett Carnac. General Cotton gave an interesting account of the beneficial effects of every improvement, however slight, in Indian roadways, and described the works undertaken to improve the navigation of the Godavery river. He much regretted that these and similar works were only executed out of revenue, and that they were thus liable to be stopped, as at present, by the pressure of temporary financial difficulties. He thought such works of the very highest importance, and that nothing should be permitted to interfere with their completion. Sir J. W. Kaye spoke chiefly of the cotton production of the native States of India, and of the enlightenment and energy of the native Princes. Sir E. W. Watkin, who proposed the toast of "Cotton, and the Cotton Supply Association," said that all who were even indirectly interested in the cotton trade of Lancashire, or of the country generally, owed a debt of gratitude to the Association, which had been the pioneer of all those improvements the results of which Dr. Watson had so well described. Among the requisites for an increased and improved supply of cotton from India were improved transit, paper currency, and also, he thought, some means by which the producer who desired to produce quality might get the Government imprimatur upon his goods, which would enable him more advantageously to send them to market. Mr. Forwood, who returned thanks for Chambers of Commerce, said that these bodies might do a great work, not only in removing hindrances in the way of trade and in influencing commercial legislation, but also in elevating the tone of commercial morality. Until, however, some amendment was secured in the constitution of the Board of Trade, they could never exercise with full effect the influence which was their due.—Abridged from the Times.

Miscellaneous.

RUMOURS.—It is rumoured that The O'Donoghue has been offered the Governorship of Madras, and that Mr. Butt, Q.C., is likely to be appointed to an Indian judgeship.

BANDA AND KIRWEE PRIZE CLAIMS.—A claim for about £11,000 of interest is now admitted, as we are informed, by the India Office, with respect to the Banda and Kirwee prize accounts, which have not as yet been adjusted. The actual claims at the present time amount, we believe, to about £600,000, four-fifths of which (or about £480,000) have been pronounced by legal opinions of the highest class—by Dr. Tristram and Mr. Charles Hall—to be clearly valid. The claims for the remainder, £120,000, have not been submitted for legal opinion; and it has been thought unnecessary at present, as there is no great controversy as to the facts, to take counsels' opinion upon these parts of the case. The Kirwee claimants, with an apparently solid case, do not seem to be so energetic as "the claimant" in another case, or Khirwee Bonds might have been in the market ere this at a fair market price.—Homeward Mail.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £500,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 7th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £345,000; to Bombay, £150,000, and to Madras, £5,000. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 11d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 11d. will receive about 29 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 20 per cent. Those above in full.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following are the latest exports of bullion by the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co.:—From Southampton, per Mooltan, 25th January, 1872: To Alexandria, gold, £2,000; to Bombay, gold, £34,106, silver, £190,500; per Poonah, 1st February, 1872; to Malta, gold, £50,000; to Bombay, gold, £50,000, silver, £187,300; to Ceylon, gold, £10,000; to Madras, gold, £12,800; to Calcutta, silver, £167,000; to Penang, silver, £107; to Singapore, silver, £20,000; to Hong Kong, silver, £17,708; to Shanghai, silver, £6,610; per Simla, 8th February, 1872; to Bombay, gold, £96,000, silver, £212,300.

LORD LAWRENCE AND THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.—At Wednesday's meeting of the London School Board, a letter was read from Lord Lawrence resigning the chairmanship of that body, as well as his seat for the division of Chelsea, on the ground that failing health required a prolonged residence in a milder climate. In accordance, however, with the earnestly-expressed request of a numerous deputation, his Lordship consented to retain his seat while availing himself of the rest which was so necessary. A letter was then read from Professor Huxley, resigning his seat, and amid many expressions of regret, the resignation was accepted. Lord Lawrence is sixty-two years of age. Professor Huxley is forty-seven.

TROOPS FROM INDIA.—It has been decided to bring home one regiment of cavalry and four battalions of infantry from India yearly in future. The corps to come home during the season 1872-73, will, doubtless, be the 20th Hussars, 3rd battalion 60th Rifles (went out in 1857), 2nd battalion 10th Regiment (went out in 1860), 2nd battalion 24th Regiment (went out to Mauritius in 1860), and 105th Light Infantry; those to go out in the event of none of them being required to embark on other service in the meantime—the 10th Hussars (returned from the Crimea in 1856), 2nd battalion 3rd Buffs (returned from Barbadoes in 1866), 43rd Light Infantry (returned from New Zealand in 1866), 40th Regiment (returned from New Zealand in 1866), and 67th Regiment (returned from the Cape of Good Hope in 1866).—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE INDIAN MAILS.—Friday evening, the 26th ult., was the first time that the Indian and Australian mails crossed from Dover to Calais in one boat. The Indian mails consisted of 277 bags, with thirty-two bags of the ordinary mail, and these and seventy-seven passengers and luggage were on board the Maid of Kent (Captain Pittcock), and the steamer on her passage in fourteen minutes from the time the train stopped on the pier. At Calais fifteen minutes were occupied in the disembarkation, and the mails were in the station before 1 A.M.; but notwithstanding the despatch used in Dover it was fifty minutes before the train left Calais, so that nearly an hour was wasted. Captain Bruce, R.N., superintended the embarkation of the mails, and went over to Calais with them. Captain Pittcock's arrangements were excellent, and he was complimented upon the celebrity and despatch with which everything was done.—Dover Chronicle, Feb. 3.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—The influence of the Suez Canal route to the East Indies and China is strikingly exemplified in the East India, China, and Japan Shipping Register. The total quantity of cottons shipped to the East in 1872 amounts to 1,752 millions of yards, of which no less than 1,446 millions were sent via Egypt and the Suez Canal. In 1870 the proportion sent via Egypt was only 933 millions out of 1,629 million yards, or about 9-16ths, while in 1871 the proportion was 14-17ths. Of yarns, 31 millions of pounds, out of 52 millions, were sent last year to the East via Egypt, while only 26 millions out of 62 million pounds were shipped by that route in 1870. From the same tables it appears that there is a decrease in cottons to Calcutta of about six million yards, but an increase of about five million pounds of yarn. To Bombay there is the enormous increase of 40 million yards of grey and coloured cottons, but white and printed cottons show a decrease of 10½ millions.

INDIAN TROOP-SHIPS.—The Indian troop-ship Crocodile, Captain G. H. Parkin, was to embark the 48th Regiment on Feb. 5 from Malta, and convey it to Bombay, via the Suez Canal. The married men, women and children, and baggage embarked on the 3rd. The Indian troop-ship Jumna, Captain Richards, we learn by telegraph, left Port Said on Jan. 31 for Malta. During the passage of the Indian troop-ship Serapis to Malta from Portsmouth, on the afternoon of the 23rd ult., James Armstrong, able seaman, who was on the look out forward, was knocked overboard by the block of the jib-halliards carrying away and striking him. Although a life-buoy was immediately let go, and a life-boat lowered, the unfortunate man was drowned, and his body could not be recovered. Another fatal accident occurred on the 30th ult. to Sergeant J. Batty, of the Army Hospital Corps, serving on board her Majesty's ship Crocodile, who was found drowned on the following morning in the south-west extension of the Grand Harbour. He was a steady, sober man, and is believed to have fallen over the steep mole, and there being nothing to lay hold of was unable to save himself.

CONSULAR.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of M. Louis François Sentis as Consul-General at Calcutta for the French Republic.

MEDICAL INQUIRY IN INDIA.—An official document about to be sent to India for distribution relates to an inquiry which is to be set on foot by the Indian Government. Its object is to collect information relative to certain diseases specially prevalent in, or peculiar to, India. The document has been prepared by Dr. Tilbury Fox, physician to the Department for Diseases of the Skin, at University College, London, and Dr. Farquhar, lately holding an important medical appointment in India. The paper contains a digest of all that is known and believed by leading authorities relative to certain skin diseases occurring in India; and it asks for specific answers to specific questions, with the view of obtaining certain additional data to those we at present possess. When sufficient information has been obtained, a report upon the several diseases referred to will be drawn up by Dr. Tilbury Fox and Dr. Farquhar. It is believed that medical science will be much advanced by the inquiry. The paper was approved, in the first instance, by the Army Sanitary Commission; and the Secretary of State for India in Council subsequently decided to circulate it as an official paper. The Earl of Kimberley has asked the India Office for copies to circulate in certain of the colonies where some of the diseases referred to exist, and with the object of gathering special information about them.

INDIAN CHARITY TO ENGLAND.—In 1863 the Maharajah of Benares, under the Bengal Presidency, gave a public well to Stoke-row, situated on the highest point of the Chiltern hills, in South Oxfordshire. Some years before, when engaged in concerting measures for the supply and retention of water in a hill tract which forms part of his domains, he had heard of the privations endured by the people of Stoke-row and its vicinity, when, wells being there unknown, the supply of water from deserted clay-pits failed them, and resolved to extend to them the boon he was providing for his own people in the same predicament. The rumour of the approaching marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales led to his request that a public well in the above-named locality should be commenced on the Prince's wedding day. This instruction was duly carried out to the day and the hour—the 10th of March, 1863. In due course the well was sunk, a superstructure of Oriental design raised over it, so that by the aid of photography the founder might be able to see the effects of his benefaction, and a simple and effective machinery devised, by means of which the ordinary strength of a lad or woman suffices to bring up from a depth of 368 feet a bucket containing nine gallons of water, with ease and safety, in a few minutes. Subsequently, as, in Hindoo orthodoxy, the plantation and well are man and wife, some adjacent land was purchased, enclosed, planted with cherry trees; a well-warden's cottage erected, and the whole constituted a trust under the guardianship of the Charity Commissioners, to whom an account of income and expenditure from the endowment is annually rendered. This public well has proved beneficial not only to Stoke-row, but to other parts of the country also, for the success of the experiment has induced several landowners in the Chiltern range, Lord Macclesfield and others, to sink similar wells for the relief of the poor, and has also evoked similar charitable gifts from other noblemen of India. In 1866 the late Sir Rajah Deonarayan, of Benares, a member of the Indian Legislative Council, gave a public well to another waterless tract in Oxfordshire. Next, the Maharajah of Vizianagram, a principality under the Madras Presidency, who was educated at Benares, and often resides there, took up the movement, and gave a drinking fountain to Hyde Park. More recently Cowasjee Jehangeer Readymoney, the opulent banker of Bombay, has followed suit with a similar gift to Regent's Park. Thus, in order of time, the Presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay have given to England their respective memorials of Indian munificence. Lately the Maharajah of Benares, on receipt of the glad tidings of the Prince of Wales's convalescence, forwarded a telegram requesting that the equivalent sterling of 2,000 rupees may be expended in charitable contributions to the poor of Stoke-row and its neighbourhood in suitable festivities and rejoicings there for the recovery of his Royal Highness. Arrangements are being made to give effect to these instructions, the illumination of the well superstructure being a part of the scheme, on the day fixed by her Majesty for a public thanksgiving.

CARNATIC RAILWAY COMPANY (LIMITED).—The ordinary general meeting of this company was held on Feb. 2, at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street; Sir R. Macdonald Stephenson in the chair. The Report, an abstract of which appeared in our last, was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the Report, said it had informed the shareholders that the surveys had occupied the engineering staff since their arrival in India, and that those surveys, so far as already completed, were in the hands of the Government for their guidance in deciding on the direction the line should take, that the works and rolling stock of the open section were in good order, and that this short line had already been worked at a profit. The necessity for changing the time of meeting from February to June was also explained, when the accounts would be made up both in England and India to the same date, Dec. 31. The only important subject requiring consideration was the recommendation of the Secretary of State that an amalgamation should be made of the three railway companies in the Madras Presidency, and the grounds upon which his Grace's suggestion was based were very clearly and distinctly enunciated in the letter the board received from the India Office, dated the 4th of January, and quoted in Allen's Mail last week. The board had purposely brought the question before the shareholders without any remarks, in order that their opinions might be "uninfluenced and unprejudiced." The shareholders would nevertheless probably desire to know the views generally of the board in regard to the advantages or disadvantages which might be expected to attend such an amalgamation, and he (the chairman) might, therefore, in a few words, state the conclusion at which the board had arrived on the subject. The Secretary of State had intimated, through the official director to the board, that in the event of an amalgamation being effected, the just claims of those officers whose employment might be terminated should be met in a liberal spirit, which at once removed any objection which might be made on personal grounds. The board, perhaps, excusably considered that the Carnatic line would be the most remunerative of the three, but they also felt that very great advantages must attend a combination of all the interests, and the administration, under a united and single board, of the entire railway system of the Madras Presidency. After weighing the several points, the directors were disposed to recommend, unless any new arguments should be adduced in the discussion to alter that opinion, that the suggestion of the Secretary of State should be favourably entertained. Mr. G. Norton, deputy chairman, seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report, which was agreed to unanimously. The retiring directors, General Sir J. Alexander and Mr. H. Brockett, were re-elected, and also Mr. Franklin and Mr. G. Smith, the retiring auditors. It was also agreed that the annual meeting should in future be held in the month of June in every year, when all the accounts would be ready. The Chairman said the only other point was with reference to the proposed amalgamation. The suggestion was originally made by the Secretary of State to the board in September last year, when the directors advised that the several lines should be first completed, by which their respective values would be better understood, and an amalgamation, if still considered advisable, be then based on the experience obtained in the interval. The Secretary of State regarded the earlier completion of the arrangement to be so desirable as to recommend its being referred to the shareholders for their consideration, and, under these circumstances, it now came before them. With a view to afford the opportunity to any of the shareholders to express their views on the subject he would propose a resolution in general terms, to the effect of giving a conditional concurrence in the recommendation of the Secretary of State, and leaving further negotiations with the Government and the other railway companies to the board, to be arranged subject to approval and confirmation at a future meeting specially convened for the purpose. He then moved a formal resolution, which was seconded by Major-General Green. A discussion then ensued, in which Mr. Brockett, Mr. Franklin, Mr. Smith, Mr. Kimber, and other shareholders took part, which resulted in a resolution amended in the following form being agreed to:—"Resolved that, with reference to the suggestion of his Grace the Secretary of State of an amalgamation of the three railway companies in the Madras Presidency, the shareholders, not prejudging any arrangement which may be found conducive to the general interests and capable of being effected on fair and equitable conditions, authorise the directors to negotiate provisionally." The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Feb. 7.—THE ALBERT AND EUROPEAN ASSURANCE COMPANIES.—Mr. CAVE obtained leave to bring in a Bill for a Commission of Inquiry into the causes of the failure of these companies. At a future stage he promised to make a somewhat fuller statement to the House, and to show why this particular form of inquiry was, in his opinion, the only one which could meet the exigencies of the case.

Colonel Phillips, has already performed good work, having twice secured a favourable hearing for their claims in the House of Commons; in addition to which they have prepared, and are now distributing by hundreds to the officers concerned, a form of petition, every word of which has been carefully considered by the officers forming the committee. This being the case, it must seem extraordinary that a second committee should have been called into existence under the title of the "Committee of the Indian Army Defence Institution," and that they should propose to inaugurate their proceedings by drawing up "a proper and unambiguous form of petition," in the room of that which Colonel Phillips and his colleagues have already provided and distributed. All true friends of the officers interested in this important question must deeply regret that such a course has been adopted, and must be of one mind in advising them to avoid the complications with which their cause is threatened by the operations of a rival agency which begins its career by sowing dissension in the camp, where union is above all of primary importance. It is not often that we venture upon a classical allusion in our practical columns; but it will be remembered that Agamemnon was assured of victory in a dream sent by Jove, provided he attacked with "all the Greeks," and when he lost the battle and complained of the deception, he was reminded that Achilles had been left in his tent, and was not united with him in action. Similar danger lurks in the division of forces and of counsels that must inevitably be caused by the perseverance of the new committee in the separate line of action upon which it has entered. The committee presided over by Colonel Phillips is known, and no suspicion of any interest apart from that of the officers it represents can by any possibility be attached to its proceedings. It has now arrived at a critical period of its existence, and we may say, is on the eve of the final struggle which must certainly be a success if success is ever to crown the exertions which have been made over a period of so many years. We have heard before now that "new brooms sweep clean," but the proverb is generally quoted to prove how shallow it is. For ourselves we mistrust that new-born zeal which vaunts itself over old experience, and in the present case it is hard to see what the new committee proposes to itself, what means it professes to have at its command, which the committee of Colonel Phillips has not proved itself capable of working.

THE KUKA EXECUTIONS.

The Times maintains that it is not so much as intimated that these "Kukas" had a grievance, unless, indeed, it was the law against murdering rival religionists, and yet they rose in arms, to the extent of their power, against the Government of the country, and might by possibility have created a most serious disturbance. Nobody can tell what effects might be produced in India by the spectacle of a successful revolt. If the "Kukas" had captured the Government post and had raised their standard, whatever it may have represented, the outbreak might soon have acquired troublesome dimensions. Probably that consideration weighed with those who had to put it down, and yet, as it happened, all this occurred within easy distance of the Army of Exercise now assembled at Delhi. That 800 men should, in the immediate neighbourhood of such a force, attempt an armed insurrection against the Supreme Government, is of itself a circumstance tending to perplex our conclusions. If the insurgents thought of this army, how could they venture upon their enterprise? If they did not, what opinion is to be formed of people so ignorant or unreflecting? Might not the magistrates have looked upon the outbreak with less than usual anxiety in consideration of the overpowering force at hand to support them? In any case, however, we must be left with the conviction that we are charged with the government of a country in no respect resembling the States or nations of Europe. India contains countless races or tribes as obscure and as insignificant as these "Kukas," any one of whom, nevertheless, might at any time attempt an insurrection just as irrational and yet as possibly mischievous. We suspect that some sentiment of fanaticism will be found at the bottom of the whole business; and yet if that be really the case, it will be impossible for us to avoid a repetition of the offence which has thus provoked a species of rebellion. The first duty of a Government is to maintain security for life and property, and the Mahomedans of India would have a far greater grievance than they can allege now if they were left without adequate protection against outbreaks of murderous bigotry.

FORCED RETIREMENTS.

The Naval and Military Gazette observes that if an officer failed to truly and faithfully serve the Company, or was unable to do so owing to mental or physical incapacity, the contract necessarily became null and void, but the fact was invariably established by a court-martial in the one case, and by a medical board in the other. Without some such proof the covenant was strictly adhered to. It is evident, therefore that the Company considered it binding. In 1858 the Crown took over, with the rights and privileges, the duties, obligations, and engagements of the company. It did even more, for in the Act which was passed in that year, it expressly guaranteed that the officers and men of the late East India

Spirit of the Home Journals.

BONUS COMPENSATION.

The Broad Arrow anticipates much confusion from the existence of two distinct committees on the subject of compensation for the Indian bonus subscriptions. The older committee, headed by Company's service should be "entitled to the like pay, pensions, allowances, and privileges * * * as if they had continued in the service of the said Company." It is impossible to conceive anything more explicit and binding than the above clause, which moreover expressly mentioned pensions. Under the Company no officer was ever obliged, save for misconduct, or mental and physical incapacity, to retire one moment earlier than he chose. If, therefore, the India Office should require officers to quit the service before they have qualified for the highest rate of pension, the covenant, the obligations of which were taken over in 1858, would be deliberately broken, and the Parliamentary guarantee completely ignored. It has been urged that a government is justified on practical considerations in breaking a contract, and informing its officers that it has no further occasion for their services. We conceive that such a position is untenable, for otherwise, the term contract would cease to have any meaning. That the East India Company did not conceive itself justified in getting rid, from considerations of economy, of any of its covenanted servants who might be in excess of requirements, is proved by the fact that whole regiments were at different times disbanded, and that the officers belonging to them were still retained in the service. Now the Company was clearly the best interpreter of the meaning of the contract which it drew up; so we may consider that it regarded the covenant as absolutely binding, save in cases of misconduct, ill-health, or mental incapacity. Prescriptive right also supports the case of the officers of the Indian service. But as we have said above, if everything else failed, the Parliamentary guarantee places the question beyond dispute. It must likewise be noted that by forcing officers to retire, not only would the latter be illegally deprived of their chances of obtaining the highest rate of pension, but their interest in the military fund would likewise be in defiance of every principle of equity confiscated. Soon after the grant of the original charter to the East India Company, that corporation, in order to prevent the scandal arising from the sight of a large number of the widows and orphans of its officers in a destitute condition, and fearing that it would render men unwilling to enter its service, originated the Military Fund. Not solely, therefore, from motives of humanity, but also from consideration of self-interest, it was ordered that every officer from the day of admission to the service, whether married or not, should contribute to a fund applied to the benefit of widows and orphans. There was no option in the matter; and the periodical contributions, as well as the donations on promotion and marriage, were stopped by the paymaster from each officer's pay. On retiring on a pension, the subscription was still continued, but whether it was then obligatory or not, we cannot say. Practically, however, it was invariably continued. Now, if an officer were compelled, say as major, to retire on the pension of £191 per annum, he would clearly be unable, if his family were large and he possessed no private fortune, to continue his subscription, and the whole of his previous payments would be thrown away.

EXAMINATIONS IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The undermentioned are reported to have passed the prescribed examination in Hindustani, according to the Lower Standard (Jan. 15):—Lieut. H. M. Mathews, 1st battalion 2nd foot; Private D. Mulholland, 83rd foot.

VETERINARY SURGEONS.—The following decision of Lord Napier of Magdala will be of interest to a valuable class of regimental officers:—"It appears to the Commander-in-Chief in India that there is an occasional misapprehension in the minds of commanding officers of corps with reference to the responsibility of veterinary surgeons. It is quite proper, of course, that military command should be exercised in the general supervision of duty, but it is right that commanding officers should understand that veterinary surgeons exercise, with regard to the horses of a corps, a responsibility analogous to that belonging to medical officers on account of the men. This responsibility, therefore, is not limited to the precincts of the hospital for sick horses, but it comprehends advice as to diet, proper shoeing, and generally the conditions under which the efficiency of the horses, the property of the State, may be best maintained."

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be over-rated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N.,
March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

SKIN DISEASES.—Scrofula, scurvy, scorbutic affections, and all cutaneous eruptions caused by hereditary taints, imperfect digestion, deleterious gases, or an impure state of the blood, may be most speedily cured by Holloway's well-known remedies. The active principle in both Ointment and Pills is so harmless, yet so powerfully purifying, soothing, and restorative, that the most inexperienced person may use them with the certainty of producing the best results. The Pills quickly remove all impurities from the circulation and system generally, while the Ointment eradicates the superficial blemish, or deeply-seated local mischief. In the irritations of the skin, very annoying to infancy, this Ointment will prove itself the best friend.

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's. —See Times, July 12, 1861.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhoea, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

*Extracts from Medical Opinions.*The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne. —See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not supply a want and fill a place."

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Jan. 29; Agra and Madras, Jan. 27; Calcutta, Jan. 26.

WE have some further particulars of the late Kuka outbreak, which was so soon and sternly suppressed. After helping themselves to arms in Malod, the insurgents on the morning of the 15th January rushed into the walled town of Malair-Kotlah, the capital of a small Mohammedan State in Sirhind. They made at once for the late Nawab's palace, around which the chief public buildings, including the Treasury, are ranged. The authorities however were already prepared for them, and after some hard fighting the rebels were driven out with a loss of seven killed and five captured, one of whom was a woman. Pressed hard by the Kotlah troops, they fell back on the village of Rurr in the Patiala State. Here they seem to have been cleverly surprised by the Tahsildar of a neighbouring village, who succeeded in taking seventy of them prisoners. Even of that number nearly half were wounded men, while a few were women and children. A good many were found unarmed, the remainder being armed only with swords, axes, and sticks. Of the Kotlah troops eight were killed and about twice as many wounded. It was out of this body of captured Kukas that Mr. Cowan selected the forty-nine who were blown away from guns. The Patiala police were scouring the country in search of those who had hitherto escaped pursuit.

AT Ferozepore the troops were under arms all one Sunday night, on account of an alarming rumour, which afterwards proved false, that a large body of insurgents were marching thither. People suddenly began to remember that between that station with its important arsenal, and Lahore, the capital of the Punjab, there is neither telegraph nor Government mail. Such at least is the statement repeated in the Times of India, but we think our contemporary must be under some mistake. Surely Ferozepore is on the high road from Umballa to Lahore!

THE manœuvres at the Camp of Exercise were to go on to the end of January. On the 19th the bulk of McMurdo's and Travers's Divisions marched from Naraina to Goorgaon, worried all the way by Sir H. Tombs, posted at Marowlie. On the 22nd the last-named officer had to try and keep General McMurdo from relieving a garrison at Toglakabad. The feint attack by the Goorgaon and Kootub roads took the troops on both sides over terribly broken country, in which both cavalry and artillery must have been sorely puzzled by the endless ravines. The movements were suddenly checked at two P.M. by the utter exhaustion of some regiments which had been on their legs for twelve hours. Next day however the fight was renewed, with final success on the whole for General McMurdo.

OF the Loshai Expedition there is not much to record this week, so far as the Indian papers are concerned. General Bouchier on the 22nd January was marching, as the telegrams had already told us, towards Poiboy, the people of which neighbourhood seemed inclined to be friendly. The climate was reported as magnificent, and the troops were in good health. The coolie detachments had at last shaken off the cholera, and joined their respective columns in good health and spirits.

POOR Lord Mayo embarked with his suite for Rangoon on the morning of January 24, after seeing the King of Siam off to Delhi. The late Viceroy was to land at Rangoon on the 29th, and after a few days' sightseeing embark for Maulmain on the 3rd of this month. From the capital of Tenasserim he would start again on the 7th, taking the Andaman Islands on his way to Orissa. How the latter part of the programme was left unfinished our readers know too well.

THE revised Bill brought in by Mr. F. Stephen with tacit reference to the case of the Progressive Brahmos provides a simple form of marriage for "persons who are neither Christians nor Jews, and who have renounced or been excluded from the communion of, or who do not profess the Hindoo, Parsee, Mohammedan, Buddhist, Sikh, or Jain religion." The limit of age is fixed at eighteen for men and fourteen for women. Notice must be given to a District Registrar specially appointed for the purpose, after one at least of the parties shall have resided five days in the district where the marriage is to come off. A check upon frivolous objections to such a marriage is provided by rendering the objector liable to a suit for libel. It is also provided that any kind of religious ceremony may be employed, so long as each of the persons to be married declares his or her intention to take the other as a lawful wife or husband, in the presence of the Registrar and three witnesses.

BY telegraph we learn some further news of the Loshai Expedition down to the 13th February. General Bouchier with the Left Column was still advancing towards the south-east, partly, we presume, in order to effect a junction with General Brownlow before the two columns set their faces homewards. The former commander had passed another village and several stockades unopposed. The enemy in his front kept on retiring, but the villagers appear to have got over their old mistrust of our troops, for they are described as remaining quietly in their homes. Let us hope that this is not another phase of Loshai cunning. Of General Brownlow we hear that on the 5th February he found the Howlong Chiefs in a submissive mood. They had promised to send back their captives, but were afraid to bring them in themselves. As soon as his commissariat was ready, he would resume his march against the enemy. The time for campaigning in the Loshai country is nearly past, and the expectation in Calcutta is that both columns will return about the 20th of next month.

A WRITER in the Indian Economist draws an alarming picture of the evils likely to flow from the use of pure water for irrigation. The waters of the Ganges, Jumna, and Bari Doab Canals are all remarkable for their purity, which is all very well for drinking purposes, but for the main purpose for which those canals were made appears to be quite the reverse of good. Water of such extreme purity has an unpleasant trick, we are told, of carrying off mineral matters, such as lime, magnesia, and iron, from the soil in which plants grow down to the sub-soil where their roots cannot reach. The richer the soil, the greater is the loss it thus incurs, and each year the work of deterioration goes on, producing at first poorer and less nourishing crops, and ending at last in utter barrenness. The poorer crops in their turn produce poorness of blood in their consumers, who die off by thousands at each recurrence of epidemic disease. A pleasant prospect this for Indian farmers and all who eat the grain produced from fields watered by Government canals! If the writer's statements can be confirmed by known facts, it is really time to hit upon some method of counteracting this fatal purity of Indian canal-water. If Indian farmers are to pay for the use of water supplied from these canals, they ought at any rate to be guarded from all the loss and danger to which their compulsory use of such water might else expose them. It would be a gross unfairness to make them pay twice over, first for water which can only impoverish their land, and then for the minerals needed, at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ maunds an acre, to avert the consequent mischief. The writer in question therefore urges the Government to supply the remedy for its own shortcomings at its own cost. The Sewalik range, for instance, near Saharanpore, contains untold wealth in the shape of fossil phosphate of lime, and from Hardwar to Cawnpore the Ganges Canal flows past beds of good kankar lime and marl. Here is the very stuff we need for the purpose, and are there not plenty of convicts who could pile the kankar and the phosphate of lime in given proportions into huge crates, which might then be placed under water along either bank of the canal? Let this be done, and the natural action of the water will complete the work by carrying the dissolved matter over the irrigable land.

THE startling news of Lord Mayo's assassination reached the India-office last Monday afternoon, and was announced the same evening by Mr. Gladstone to the Commons and by the Duke of Argyll to the Lords. Amidst deep silence the latter minister read out the dismal telegram received that day from Mr. Ellis; and then, amid frequent murmurs of assent from all sides of the House, proceeded to enlarge on the virtues of the deceased nobleman, than whom "no man ever had more friends" or "deserved better to have them." His Grace bore witness to the cordial relations which had always existed between himself and the murdered Viceroy, to the absence of any serious difference between them, and to the exceeding energy and deep sense of right with which Lord Mayo had discharged his duties towards the people of India. He hinted indeed that the Viceroy's zeal for the public service amounted sometimes to a fault, and that in visiting Port Blair he was really doing other men's work. It is clear to us however that Lord Mayo had good reason for seeing with his own eyes how things were managed in a convict settlement which had lately become too widely known for the laxity of its penal discipline. It was no misplaced sense of duty that carried him to his doom at Port Blair, but a thoroughly business-like desire to promote the public interests in every possible way.

MR. GLADSTONE paid an eloquent and worthy tribute of praise and sorrow to a nobleman who had been outdone by none of his predecessors in "zeal, intelligence, and untiring devotion to the public service." The untimely death of such a ruler was described by Mr. Disraeli as "one of those calamities which sadden nations." The same speaker's reference to Lord Mayo's wide popularity in the House of Commons was greeted with loud applause. Nothing in short that public esteem or private friendship could offer to the late Viceroy's memory was wanting from speakers in either House. Colonel Sykes's further assurance that the sad event was due to "individual fanaticism" alone, and not to political feeling, appears to be borne out by Major-general Taylor's subsequent letter to the Times. If Sher Ali, the murderer, be the man whom General Taylor takes him to be, a brave rough Afreedie from beyond Peshawar, who fought for us against the Wahabies of Sitana, but was sent a life-convict to Port Blair for having, in furtherance of a private blood-feud, slain another on British ground, we are enabled to account both for the circumstances and the motives of his murderous attack on Lord Mayo. It is not surprising that a prisoner whose only crime was really none by the usage of his own country, should have so soon been restored to partial freedom, and it is easy to conceive a proud, quickhanded Pathan soldier impelled, by brooding over a fancied wrong, to plunge his knife at any favouring moment into the heart of him who specially represented the wrongdoer. At the same time it must be remembered that this untutored savage was also a Mohammedan, living probably among not a few Mohammedans banished to Port Blair for plotting against our rule, or for cruel outrages on our Hindu subjects. We cannot therefore assume, with the Times, that Sher Ali was the last man to become the tool of a Wahabi plot to take revenge on Lord Mayo for the strong action of his Government against Ameer Khan and his fellow-traitors. How many men in all ages have been driven by a sense of private wrong into joining movements of which they might once have disapproved? In this case the one hypothesis does not of necessity shut out the other. If General Taylor is right in his conjectures, it does not follow that Mr. William Taylor is wrong in connecting the murder of Lord Mayo with that of Chief-Justice Norman. We can but hope that the connection did not exist.

FROM the various telegrams of the past week it appears that Lord Mayo was murdered at seven p.m. on the 8th current, just as he had reached the pier at Port Blair on his way back to the Glasgow man-of-war. After a day spent in visiting the different stations on the Andamans, the Viceroy had rested with his friends for a quarter of an hour on the top of Mount Harriet to admire the view. By the time he reached the pier it was quite dark, and his party were making their way by torchlight to the boats. Lord Mayo at this time was "surrounded by his friends and guards;" but another account describes him as having got a little way ahead of his followers. General Stewart, the new Governor of the Andamans, who was anyhow nearest him, had just "turned to give some directions," when a man sprang forward through the guards and stabbed the Viceroy in both shoulders. Lord Mayo leaped forward from the pier into the shallow water alongside, saying to Major Burne, who ran up to support him as he fell, "Burne, they have hit me." These were the last words he ever spoke. He died insensible, and apparently without pain, before the boat which conveyed him had reached the Glasgow. The assassin had meanwhile been seized and carried off to await his trial for a deed which he said was done under the inspiration of God. He has already been sentenced to death. A later telegram confirms General Taylor's guess as to his identity with the Afreedie Sher Ali, who fought on our side in 1857, and afterwards served as an orderly under Major James and his successors in the Peshawar district. In company with Colonel Rennell Taylor, he shared in the hardships of the Umbeyla campaign in 1863. His treacherous murder of a kinsman near Colonel Pollock's house in 1867, in pursuance of an old blood-feud, led to his being tried and sentenced to death; but, in spite of his own entreaties, the punishment was commuted to transportation for life; and in 1869 he was sent over to Port Blair, where his good conduct soon procured him his freedom within certain bounds. Sher Ali was only twenty-five when he committed his last murder. He is said to have been "a fearless man, much liked by his masters, but passionate and troublesome with his fellows."

LORD MAYO's personal popularity in India was so great, that the people are said to be mourning for him "as for a friend." We are told that during his luckless visit to the Andamans special precautions were taken for his safety, but the murderer had succeeded in escaping all notice up to the moment of his attack. In Bombay, as in Calcutta, all business was suspended for several days on account of this sad catastrophe. Mr. Strachey is acting as Viceroy pending the arrival of Lord Napier from Madras; that nobleman having declined to discharge the viceregal duties before taking his seat in the Sa-preme Council. This he will probably do on the 24th inst. The main facts reported home by telegraph are confirmed by an official statement since issued in Calcutta.

LORD MAYO's body, telegraphs the Times Correspondent, was conveyed to Government House, Calcutta, at four P.M. on Saturday last. It was followed by an immense procession, and nearly all Calcutta turned out to see it pass, the effect in some parts of the route being described as a regular "sea of human beings." English and native regiments alternately formed the line, and a regiment of Bengal Cavalry accompanied the funeral train. At Government House the coffin was set down at the foot of the grand staircase, and the procession passed uncovered. The scene is said to have been "most solemn and impressive."

FROM the latest telegrams it appears that the assassin has resolved to "make a statement" before he is executed. It is significantly added that he belongs to the same tribe as Mr. Norman's murderer. Private letters in Persian were found in his house, but their contents have not yet been published.

If the officers of the old Indian Army looked to receive from the India Office treatment as liberal as that lately granted to the officers of the British Line, Mr. Grant Duff's answer to the question put last Tuesday by Colonel Sykes must have taught them a different lesson. The Under Secretary for India curtly assured his questioner that, in the matter of bonus compensation, the Indian Minister had determined to abide by the principle of Sir Stafford Northcote's Despatch of May, 1867. That document merely amended one or two items in Lord Cranborne's despatch of August 1866; so that the claims to compensation for lost bonuses remains as far from settlement as it did ten years ago. That is a pleasant reflection for the officers concerned, who no doubt fondly trusted that successive votes of the House of Commons, and the opinions lately recorded by the Governments of Madras and Bombay, would have inclined the head of the Indian Council to grant them at least the same measure of justice which their comrades in the Royal Army are now receiving. In the interests of truth and justice they had a right to look for the compensation which is still denied them in the interests, we suppose, of strict economy. It will hardly reconcile them to their own hard lot, to remember that a few months ago some of their former comrades were rescued from a like doom by the amendment which Sir. C. Wingfield carried in Clause IV. of the Army Bill. According to the original clause the officers of the new line regiments were to get their claims adjusted on the terms of Lord Cranborne's Despatch; that is, they were to run the chance of getting no compensation at all. So marked a difference however between their treatment and that of the purchase officers could not be tolerated in a House which professes some regard for the decencies; and so the amended clause placed the non-purchase regiments on exactly the same footing as the purchase regiments, in respect of their right to receive the full market-value of their commissions down to a certain date. Already have four of the non-purchase officers received full payment of the claims advanced by them under the amended clause. Not without reason therefore did the officers of the Indian Army renew their prayer for compensation for the sums they too would have received from their juniors, had the bonus system sanctioned by the Court of Directors and the Board of Control continued to exist. But the policy of their present masters appears to be guided by some other principle than that of simple justice. It remains to see whether the House of Commons will consent to stultify its own decrees by refusing to claimants strong in everything but political influence the very same boon which last year was granted to officers who had counted on selling their commissions either in partial or downright breach of law.

Up to the present moment no successor to Lord Mayo has been appointed. Among the names we have heard suggested are those of the Duke of Edinburgh, Lord Northbrook, and Lord Dufferin. If his Royal Highness would care to undertake so high, and just now so perilous a post, there are many good reasons for predicting the best possible result from such a choice. Of Lord Northbrook's fitness for the work there is little doubt, and Lord Dufferin has many friends on his side.

By a slip of the pen we spoke of Sir James Hogg in our last issue as having been offered the Judge-Advocateship of Bengal.

He was really offered the post of Judge Advocate-General in this country.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, February 20, 1872.

LORD MAYO.

HARDLY had the last number of this journal issued from the press, when tidings of the cruel blow that cut short the career of India's late Viceroy began to circulate in London. That same evening the Prime Minister and the Duke of Argyll announced to horror-stricken audiences in either House the fact that Lord Mayo had been suddenly stabbed to death, on the 8th of this month, by a Pathan convict, at the moment of his departure from Port Blair. Two quick strokes of a common cooking-knife, wielded by a strong and resolute arm, at a moment when the destined victim and all around him were off their guard, deprived India of a Viceroy who had already made his mark among Anglo-Indian statesmen, and had won the hearts of all who came into contact with him by his genial manners, strong good sense, and unwearied zeal for the public good. During the three years of his Indian rule Lord Mayo had travelled busily to and fro over the greater part of his dominions, seeing everything that came within his reach and many things which a less active or conscientious Viceroy would have left on one side, and venturing almost alone into places where his life must often have lain at the mercy of any ruffian who cared to take it. Secret plotters against the British rule, and fanatics who would have deemed it no wrong to shed the blood of an accursed Feringhie, must often have lurked or swaggered about his path. His government had used all its power and forethought in ferreting out and punishing the leaders of the Wahabi and Kuksa movements. It would hardly have surprised, however greatly it might have shocked us, to hear that he had perished by the assassin's knife or bullet in the course of one of these up-country journeys. Few Englishmen indeed have thus fallen in any part of India, thanks to the traditional charm which has hitherto surrounded them. But the murder of a Conolly, a Mackeson, or a Norman, serves from time to time to remind us that even Englishmen are not wholly exempt from the lot of other mortals, in a country where life is held cheap in comparison with the claims of social or religious duties.

And yet in his case, as in so many others, it was the unforeseen that actually came to pass. Who would have thought a few days ago that the most ubiquitous and perhaps the most popular of Indian viceroys had been done to death on a remote island in the Bay of Bengal, at a moment when all chance of danger seemed to have vanished? Lord Mayo had got through his day's work at Port Blair. He was on the point of stepping from the pier into the boat that next moment would have carried him away to his ship; his escort and companions were close behind him; nobody about him dreamed of coming evil, when in the favouring darkness a sudden rush followed by two well-planted blows proved the vanity of human calculations, and hurried the ruler of a hundred and eighty millions to a premature grave. With regard to the reason for a blow so sudden and so unmerited, we must still remain in the dark. It may be, as some have argued, that the murderer saw in his victim the head of a Government which had done him what he thought a cruel wrong; but it is quite as probable that, in stabbing the Viceroy, he was consciously fulfilling the desire of those who thought to rid India of the foremost enemy to the cause they had most at heart, the cause for which Ameer Khan and his fellow-plotters had just been doomed to lifelong imprisonment in a lonely island of the Bay of Bengal. Whichever may prove the true reading of this sad event, we may take it for granted that the only change it will produce in the government of India will be the substitution of one Viceroy for another, and, if Lord Mayo died for a political object, the adoption of yet sterner measures against the fanatics who may have procured his death. No fear of meeting a like fate will deter Lord Mayo's successors from carrying out his own policy of evenhanded justice and well-considered reform on behalf of all classes of the Indian people. Nor will even the death of so able a ruler leave more than a passing gap in the administration of Indian affairs. We are proud to think that England has still some statesmen as good as he, and that, pending the choice of a fit successor, the wheels of our Indian State machinery will continue to work as smoothly as they did when Sir Charles Metcalfe or Sir William Denison filled the office now temporarily assigned to Lord Napier of Madras.

To fix Lord Mayo's place among Indian Viceroys would be just now an invidious, if it were even a practicable task. His reign to begin with was eminently peaceful. He had no great wars to carry through, no new provinces to annex or conquer, no great mutiny to put down, no new policy even of peace and retrenchment to set on foot. Little was left him save to walk in the footsteps of Lord Lawrence, and to emulate the peaceful reforms of Lord William Bentinck. Still there remained to him when he landed three years ago at Calcutta a pretty wide field for the display of sound statesmanship and enlightened energy, and in this field Lord Mayo worked on the whole to good purpose, fully vindicating the wisdom of Mr. Disraeli in selecting him for so high a post. His first appearance on the Indian stage, as holder of the great Umballa Durbar in March, 1869, impressed all around him with the same kind of personal charm which had already gained him so many friends at home. His genial courtesy and ready tact clinched the good effect previously wrought on the mind of the Afghan monarch by Lord Lawrence's timely offer of arms and money. At a later period his prudent counsels went far to bring about the desired reconciliation between Shere Ali and his rebellious son. From the time of his landing in India Lord Mayo devoted himself with unwearied zeal and shrewd ability to the task of governing his great empire. To a man of his active habits, upright nature, and inquiring turn of mind, the duties of his office were anything but a sinecure. His presence at the Council Board, where he was sure to be found when any business was in hand, betokened at once a patient hearing of moot points and the prompt despatch of whatever had to be promptly done. A clear head, good heart, ripe knowledge of the world, much experience of official business, and a shrewd insight into character, combined with a firm will, a pliant manner, and immense industry, to make Lord Mayo an efficient ruler of all but the highest order. His colleagues found him a loyal and trusting friend. To all who served under him his countenance was freely given, so long as they did their duty. Throughout the long controversy regarding the income-tax he stood so manfully by his finance-minister, Sir Richard Temple, that his own popularity suffered a passing eclipse. On proved delinquents his reforming hand fell heavily enough, as the censure passed by him

Like many of his predecessors, the late Viceroy had a keen appetite for hard work and a searching eye for matters of apparent detail. At one time he had the business of three great departments in his own hands. His very relaxation was often harder than other men's work. In his frequent wanderings about the country his amazing energy would cover as much ground, both real and metaphorical, in one day as men of less iron frames would hardly cover in three or four. One of his morning rides before breakfast would have been for most men a good day's work. Now hurrying from one frontier post to another, anon inspecting the site for a new hill station, one while opening a new line of railway in a cotton district, at another exchanging courtesies with the high-born princes of Rajpootana, or political talk with the Maharajah of Cashmere, he went everywhere, saw and heard everything for himself, and turned his new knowledge to the best possible account. If he followed the lead of Lord Lawrence in imposing new cesses for the public good on the reluctant landholders of Bengal, and even in carrying out the concession of new financial powers to the local governments, to him perhaps belongs the chief credit of establishing the new system of State Railways, and of organising the new department of Trade and Agriculture. No Viceroy, unless it were Lord Dalhousie, ever took a keener or more intelligent interest in all schemes for developing India's material and industrial wealth. Nor could even Lord W. Bentinck have clung more steadily than himself to the duty of keeping down the growing expenditure at the least possible sacrifice of the public needs. He lived long enough to see the yearly deficit bloom into a surplus, and if the hateful and unwise income-tax should be missing from the next Indian Budget, we shall know whom India will have chiefly to thank for the boon.

Of Lord Mayo's foreign policy little need be said, except that the same tact and good sense which guided his dealings with Shere Ali bore good fruit on all sides of the British-Indian frontier, and along the shores of the Persian Gulf. Over the native chiefs and nobles who attended his frequent durbars and receptions, his fine tact and patrician breeding conspired with a certain taste for pomp and splendour to strengthen to the utmost the influence involved in his viceregal rank and powers. In the disposal of his patronage Lord Mayo was preserved by his natural insight and strict sense of duty from committing any serious mistake. In his honest desire to govern justly, he had of late been lending a ready ear to the complaints of his Mohammedan subjects; and nearly the last political act of his life was the avowal of his determined support to the Bill by which Mr. Fitzjames Stephen seeks to secure for native Indians, who have abandoned their former faith without becoming Christians, the right of marrying under certain easy conditions after their own way.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In a letter in your paper of the 13th, signed "Philostatus," and another in the Homeward Mail of the 12th, signed "Unus de Multis," evidently from the same pen, the fact of my having been enrolled in the Committee of the "Indian Army Defence Institution" is mentioned triumphantly; and as, in an editorial in the Homeward Mail on the same subject, I am invited to explain the circumstance, I will do so in "plain English," and with strict regard to plain truth. Observing in the Homeward Mail that "Justitia" had some movement on foot for the benefit of Indian officers, I wrote twice to that address, and my second application was answered by a letter signed by a retired Indian officer (who had signed the general petition I got up regarding the loss of regimental bonus, and which was presented to Parliament in 1870), and by an officer who is on the effective branch of the service, inviting me to attend a meeting at 45, Pall-mall, which I did. At this meeting, whilst the plan of future operations was being discussed, I said that there was already a "Bonus Committee," of which I was President, and the working of which I considered should not be interfered with; I also stated that I had been working in this cause for about three years. On my making this statement it was remarked, "Well, then, that point is settled and provided for," and on this understanding alone I joined the Committee. However, at their next weekly meeting (which I was unable to attend), a circular was framed including the Bonus question; and when I attended the next (the third) meeting it was submitted for approval. I then remonstrated, and was informed by the Rev. A. Kinloch, the Resident Member of the "Indian Army Defence Institution," that my objection was too late; but I nevertheless desired that my dissent might be recorded.

The Committee also passed a resolution that I should make over to them all the petitions which had already been, or should hereafter be, intrusted to me for presentation to Parliament! The wisdom and justice of this resolution need no comment. I, of course, dissented, and, as I considered that I had been misled as to the object of the Committee, and had also been most uncourteously treated by its "Resident Member," I sent in my resignation.

In reply, the Committee asked me to reconsider my withdrawal, which (to use their own words) they "strongly deprecated," and they at the same time forwarded an attempt at an apologetic explanation from the Resident Member. In answer to this communication, I wrote that I would allow my name to remain on the Committee, "with the distinct proviso that the work of the Bonus Committee should not be interfered with, but that at the same time we should be happy to take into our consideration any suggestions the I. A. D. I. might at any time deem it advisable to make." Nothing, however, would suit the plan of the new Committee but the merging of the Bonus Committee into theirs, and, in the case of our consenting to be so extinguished, they offered me the leadership of the Bonus question! The "Bonus Committee" unanimously declined this proposition, and, on my third and emphatic application, my request to have my name withdrawn was complied with.

As to my willingness (incorrectly assumed by "Unus de Multis" in the Homeward Mail) to preside over the new Committee, I beg to state that I had already too much work on my hands to contemplate adding to it by my taking up such a position with reference to the Indian Army Defence Institution, although one officer who has since seceded from our ranks was exceedingly indignant that the chair was not offered to me. Any particulars regarding the "Bonus Committee" may be easily ascertained on personal application being made at Messrs. Grindlay and Co., 55, Parliament-street, where the Committee assemble weekly on Tuesdays at one P.M., and I can assure inquirers that they will not be met with the reply that "the names are not at present for publication;" on the contrary, we court publicity.

I should not have troubled you to insert so long a letter had I not been challenged to do so; and I must admit that I am very glad to avail myself of the invitation conveyed in the editorial of the Homeward Mail of the 12th inst. to explain my brief connection with the Indian Army Defence Institution.—
I am, yours faithfully,
J. C. PHILLIPS,
President of Bonus Committee.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I regret that the spirit of my note last week should have displeased you, but I still appeal, on behalf of the Indian Army Defence Committee, for fair play. I did not, as I sincerely assure you, know of the existence of any organised committee at the time when we were elected to support the interests of our brother officers. Your correspondent accepted a seat at our Board, and, in our opinion, has no claim to monopolise the management of the Bonus Question, with regard to which, it must be apparent, there are diversities of interests and of views.

Mr. Grant Duff's reply on Tuesday last to Colonel Sykes shows that the Government, or the India Office, has not advanced, in a Liberal direction, one step beyond the platform built by Lord Cranborne's Despatch of August, 1866. It is upon that platform, as we think, that the petitions which have been circulated three or four months ago would land the Indian officers, for those petitions ask nothing more than a legislative license to receive in 1872, under the plain provisions of the fourth Section of the Regulation of the Forces Bill, as much as they could have got in October, 1871, and not one sixpence beyond that sum; and there is, moreover, an awkward clause in Mr. Cardwell's Act which provides that no officer on retirement shall receive, in pursuance of the Act, more than he would have received if the Act had not passed.

I do not say that the wording of the Act may not be open to different constructions, but the ground is so treacherous that the Defence Committee fears to tread upon it. Most earnestly would we work in complete harmony with those who differ from us, if possible. If not, we may yet hope that emulation may do good, and that we may stir one another to labour with more zeal, and diligence, and caution, and activity, than has hitherto been exerted. In a matter so serious, feuds, and jealousies, and rivalries, must do infinite harm, and those who are interested will some day say to us Capulets and Montagues, "a plague on both your houses."

If the whole of the circumstances could be explained, I feel sure you would not accuse the Defence Committee of promoting dissension, and there is not one among them but would gladly welcome the restoration of unity and concord on going forth to battle in Parliament for the Bonus compensation or any other matter of public interest in which Indian officers are concerned.—I am, Sir, yours obediently, PHILOSTRATUS.

A MILITIA FOR INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—It was well said during the Mutiny that the English are prone to get in to a hobble, but exercise most undaunted resolution in getting out of it. It would be good for our reputation if we were as careful to avoid dangers as we are determined in extricating ourselves.

Ought we to trust our magnificent Empire in India to one pitched battle? Ought we to neglect providing reserves for our army there?

We have hitherto relied for reinforcements either on England thousands of miles distant, or on hasty levies of hireling natives, belonging to races whom we have conquered, but whom we hope to bribe to fight for us.

It is dangerous to depend upon assistance from England. In 1857 the Home Government was enabled to send out a mighty army, because peace had been concluded with Russia, and we had no enemy either in Europe or in America; but if a European war were to be imminent, and there were danger of Egypt being closed to the passage of our troops, the Indian Government would have to shift for itself; it could not depend on assistance from Europe, and might be called upon to send home part of its military strength.

Hasty recruiting in India is a resource on which no wise statesman will rely. We tried it in 1842, in 1846, and in 1857. I believe that all experienced Generals will admit that these raw levies cost a great deal more than they were ever worth. Mere hirelings, who expect to be discharged at the close of a war, naturally wish to make the most of their opportunities. They are inclined to plunder, and not inclined to be killed; the recruiting officers cannot be very fastidious in enlisting them, and consequently many useless or objectionable men enter our service.

We require in India a militia, a force which would cost little during times of peace, but might be made very efficient on the outbreak of war. If every land-owner were bound to provide one militiaman for every Rs. 1,000 (2,000) of his rent roll, we should have a reserve force on which we could rely, for the landowners would be responsible for the good conduct of the men they supplied. A few weeks' drill every year would suffice during peace, and for these few weeks the militia would receive sepoy's pay from Government.

The duty of providing men would cost the landowners next to nothing, for there are at this present moment tens of thousands of clansmen eager for service. One hundred and fifty thousand Militia need not in peacetime cost more than fifteen Regiments of regular Sepoys, if we exclude the pay of European officers, and we have at present many European officers with nothing to do.

When the battle of Ferozeshuhr was fought, on the 22nd and 23rd of December, 1845, the Empire of India trembled in the balance. Had Tej Singh and his fresh troops advanced, there was apparently nothing that could stop their progress till they reached Calcutta.

When the Mutiny broke out in 1857 the state of the kingdom of Rewah caused anxiety. On the loyalty of the Bughels depended our communications with the Nerbuddah territories, and our means of obtaining corn from Jubbulpore. A hireling army was enlisted, consisting of Artillery, Cavalry, and Infantry, and placed under the command of Colonel Hinde. As soon as this army was ordered to proceed in the direction of Allahabad to intercept Rouwr Singh and a body of mutineers, it disbanded itself. Every man went to his home, and Colonel Hinde was left unsupported. The Governor-General's Agent, Lieutenant (now Colonel) Osborne, had recourse under these embarrassing circumstances to a Militia. He called upon the Talookhdars to supply their feudal retainers to form an Army, and in a short time he was able to take the field, to capture four forts, and to re-open the road to Jubbulpore which had been closed. The strong Fort of Myhere with its double ditch was taken after a short siege, and the Fort of Bijeragoogurh was gallantly stormed.

This campaign proved the great value of a force of Rajpoot clansmen, organised on a feudal system and well commanded.—
Your obedient servant, T.

LORD NAPIER ON INDIAN DISCONTENT.

The Times of India agrees in opinion with his Excellency that the cause of the discontent referred to lies deeper than any irritation which may have arisen from the imposition of an income-tax. At the same time while we think that he has underrated the mischief of this unjustly levied and oppressive tax, he is not, in our opinion, correct in stating that had Europeans been exempt, we should have heard very little about it. When this tax was originally proposed, that is to say, after the Mutiny, and when there was an absolute necessity for some extraordinary measure of taxation to bridge the financial gulf, the European community were almost unanimous in its favour. Nor was it till its continued imposition in times of apparent prosperity, and its sudden increase to a war rate at a period of profound peace, that the European press of India raised its voice against it. We concur entirely with Lord Napier in assigning as one cause of discontent the disappearance of that class of Government servants who made India their home—the men who lived amongst the natives, who studied their characters and their languages, their religious laws and institutions, who to some extent adopted their habits, customs, and manners, and who not unfrequently intermarried with them. Such associations naturally beget friendships and a condition of things in which it may be possible for the governed, lightly to bear the yoke of a conquering race. This was the patriarchal age, but the state of society existing in those times has passed away with the times themselves. Return to it would in many respects be undesirable. And were it otherwise, each new link by which that chain which binds India to the mother country is shortened, renders it the more impossible. Regrets, then, on this score are vain, though we do think it possible that if men holding the highest official positions showed a less unbending and more conciliatory spirit towards the people and more earnestness for their welfare, and thus set a better example to their subordinates, greater harmony might spring up between them. Possibly then the natives' mind might become disabused of the idea which is taking fast hold of it, that all Europeans now in India, be they traders or tax-gatherers, have come to the country to make money and get out of it as fast as they can. More nearly does his Excellency approach to a cause of serious discontent, and one that is daily growing in magnitude and importance, when he touches on the ambition of the highly educated natives. Nothing is more natural, in a people who are perpetually being told that they have an equal right to the highest offices under the Crown with any other subjects of her Majesty, that, feeling themselves fitted both by their intelligence and education to discharge the duties of these offices, they should aspire to hold them. We cannot blame them for this; while honesty compels us to admit that any Government who would raise aspirations in the minds of its subjects knowing that it had not the power of satisfying them, or, worse still, which it never had the intention of fulfilling, would be guilty of a breach of faith more criminal than we can find words to define. We do not accuse the present Government or any preceding Government of a policy so supremely Machiavellian in its character. We believe that successive Governments of India have paid little attention to native society, in its altering phases. They have allowed it, with other things, to drift, under the impression that a transitive period must be passed during which the chrysalis is undergoing incubation before the insect will have burst forth in its new and beautiful form indued with fresh life and vigour. It may be so; we sincerely hope that it is so; but that the views of Lord Napier are really entertained and are widely disseminated we have assurances from native observers of whose honesty, truthfulness, and integrity we hold the highest opinion. The Government of India have voluntarily assumed an extremely difficult position towards their native subjects; but they cannot recede from it. On the contrary, they must advance; and it will require all the ability, combined with the highest principle and the strictest impartiality which we are accustomed to look for in British statesmen of the highest order to secure for the Government of India the respect, and at the same time the hearty co-operation of the most intelligent and most highly educated class of the natives of this country in their onward career. We by no means intend to assert that such men are not at present at the helm, or that men of the right stamp will be wanting to guide the State vessel in the future. At the same time we think that Anglo-Indian statesmen both here and at home will do well to ponder well over the weighty words of the victor of Magdala, which in our humble judgment are words of wisdom and truth.

INDIAN ARMY EXPENDITURE.

The Friend of India observes that the pith of General Balfour's statement is in the first two lines of paragraph 54, that "it is in supplies where administrative control is powerless that the increased expenditure has taken place. General Balfour's statement simply is that Sir Henry Durand in the above words meant that supplies were beyond administrative control, whereas it will be seen that he goes on to prove, and that very clearly, that on these very points, where he is alleged to have said there was no control, there was in reality a very effective control indeed, and the whole tenor of the minute and of every word that precedes it is to show that what Sir Henry meant was that no administrator, however able, could rule the market prices of commodities, and prevent an increase of expenditure if the materials of war and the necessities of war increased in cost. Indeed, we question that anyone at all concerned in, or acquainted with, military administration in India will have patience after reading these plain facts, from a most able and trenchant minute, with General Balfour's plain, unmistakable, and, we have now no hesitation in saying, culpable misrepresentation. In fact, after reading this minute of Sir Henry Durand and the minute of Sir William Mansfield, we are more than ever satisfied that not only did Sir Henry Durand not mean what General Balfour states that he meant, but that he meant nothing at all like it, nor anything at all that can be construed by any fairness of reasoning into any such meaning. And the wrong done by General Balfour in this case is all the more marked because among the ardent administrative reformers of the time when these facts were committed to paper, there was not one more ardent than Major-General Norman, who has had for months to bear the brunt of General Balfour's criticism. It is easy to criticise; it is not so easy to perform the duties of an administrator. There is nothing as far as we can see throughout this volume to lead General Balfour to suppose that Sir Henry Durand's minute meant what General Balfour says it meant. Whenever the minute is referred to afterwards, it is referred to in the same terms, as showing that increase of prices and the immense changes in our Army organisation were matters beyond absolute administrative control, but that in spite of these great difficulties the administration had attempted to control them, and with eminent success wherever control was possible. Sir Henry simply meant this—that if you bought a loaf for twopence yesterday, and had to pay fourpence for it to-morrow, that was beyond administrative control; but that good administration would endeavour by other means and in another direction to restore the balance which the advanced price had deranged. We shall have again to refer to this important Blue-book. All that we wish at present to show is that the complete minute, and Sir William Mansfield's minute following upon it, and every other official document in this volume, as far as we have seen, are Major-General Norman's vindication.

THE GIRNEE EXPEDITION.—We lately reported that the proceedings of a small expedition on the Tank frontier sent out to build a fort at Girnee. The following is the progress that has been made. The roofing of all the accommodation in the post, with the exception of the officers' quarters and the stables, is complete. The walls of the officers' quarters are twelve feet above the level of the roof of the barracks. Half the stabling is roofed and the other half only wants two feet of brick masonry to be ready for roofing, the timber for which is collected. The plastering of the outside of the post and the outside of the accommodation is well advanced. It is proposed to defer the plastering of the interior of the lines to a more favourable season for its quickly drying. The puddling of the tank is very nearly completed. The pucca masonry channel down the side of the tank by which it will be filled—the syphon drain connecting the tank with a well some thirty feet distant, and the well itself from which water for use or for emptying the tank will be taken, are all finished, and water has been let into the tank which is now filling.—Indian Public Opinion, Jan. 23.

THE KUKA RISING.

LOODIANA, Jan. 21.—In my previous communication regarding the Kooka insurrection I stated, I believe, that on the 17th instant forty-nine of the captured prisoners had been blown away from the guns of the Nawab of Mullair Kotla by the Superintendent of Police, in the presence of the Deputy Commissioner, upon whom during the proceeding an attack was made by one of them, who was however immediately cut to pieces by the attending sepoy. On the 10th the Commissioner, who had then arrived there, executed sixteen more; he also made over eight of them, who were Puttiala subjects, to the authorities of that State for punishment, and forwarded seven more to the jail at this place for further examination and subsequent disposal.

All the Civil Officers returned to Loodiana via Mullowdh yesterday, leaving the Puttiala officials to complete the capture of the remnant of the rebel band, and the outbreak may now, it is to be hoped, be considered at an end.

The outbreak had for some time been anticipated, and the plans of Government had been as far as possible decided upon in advance. On the first intimation of the attack upon Mullowdh, the deputy Commissioner, Mr. Cowan, having duly telegraphed the news to the Commissioner, started with the superintendent of police, Colonel Parkins, and the civil surgeon, Dr. Ince, for that place, and having completed their investigations there, they lost no time in proceeding to Kotla, where they arrived the next day, before even the troops of the chiefs of Puttiala and Jhaend, whose assistance was really and promptly given, had had time to join them. British troops were, by order of the Government, immediately despatched from the camp at Delhi and from Jullundur and Umballa, and some European infantry reached Loodiana on the 16th, the second day only after the beginning of the outbreak. They were at once pushed on to Mullair Kotla in ekhas and other conveyances, other troops rapidly following, and the fort here, and the town and station, are strongly garrisoned with artillery, cavalry and infantry, some of which are held in readiness to start at a moment's notice should any further disturbance occur in any part of the district.

There is, however, no expectation of this, everything continues tranquil. The prompt and vigorous disposal of the captured rebels will, it is hoped, have had the effect of extinguishing the spark which otherwise would not improbably have increased to a dangerous flame. As soon as it was known that the band started, a number of other Kookas, it has since been learnt, at once prepared and started to join them; 200 from this district alone, it is said, were on their way to Kotla when they learnt the fate of those they had proposed joining. The same would probably have been the case throughout the province, and thus it is not unlikely that by the decided and effectual measures here adopted a formidable insurrection has been avoided. The head of the sect, Ram Sing, came in upon being summoned by the Commissioner, and he and several of his Soobas or lieutenants who have since been arrested have been deported from the province.

The influence of Ram Sing is very great, and the devotion to him of his followers is very profound. The feeling is a deep and religious one. The Kooka sect is to the Sikhs what Wahateism is to the Mahomedans, excepting perhaps that the spirit in more fanatical and the complete enthralment of the minds of the revivalists by their priests or Goeroos greater even than in those enthusiasts. It is on this account that such careful precautions have been taken by Government, and it is likely these will have to be continued for some time, since there is no predicting what fierce religious zeal may prompt the followers of this creed to attempt to carry out. The number of the sect is variously estimated from 80 to 300,000, but it does not probably exceed 100,000, a figure after all forming a small fraction of the population of the Province. The present attitude of the Government and the local authorities is that of attention!—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

THE LOSHAI EXPEDITION.

A correspondent of the Bengal Times, dating 13th Jan., writes—

"I suppose you have heard that Brigadier-General Brownlow has started from the place marked Syloo Savoonga on the map, to perpetrate a counter-raid on the Howlongs. His inroad is likely to continue for about ten days, after which time the General will return to Syloo Savoonga, and await the turn of events, prepared to repeat the attack, if necessary."

Advices have been received by the officer commanding at Demagiree to the effect that, while the Commissioner is anxious to promote negotiations between the frontier chiefs and our Government in every way compatible with the dignity of the British nation, and with the strict requirements of good faith on the part of the Loshais, he will carefully avoid accepting any condition what might have the effect of restricting the future movements of the Brigadier-General in the Howlong country. The enemy's submission must be entire and unconditional, leaving us free to adopt any step we please for the future welfare and safety of the frontier. We can, in fact, only demand that it would not consist with our prestige to secure by treaty, as in the latter mode there is a semblance of equality between the contracting parties we could not afford to tolerate, lest we should mislead the Loshais into a conviction of our inability to become complete masters of conditions. We should dictate, they obey, without modification or reservation.

CAMP TIPAI MOOKH, Jan. 10.—Guns to the front! is at last the order, so we may suppose that the political Loshai horizon is not quite so clear as it appeared to be a few days ago, or that Mr. Poyboy has, in spite of his protestations of amity backed up by the present of an elephant's tusk, determined to try conclusions with us. It appears that the bulk of the force is still at No. 7, waiting for supplies which are being pushed up as fast as possible; the requirements are two months' supply for 2,000 men, and only about 500 maunds at the outside can be pushed up daily. Elephants and coolies are all employed in forwarding the rations, and are arranged in stages at the different camps; still at the best it is a very slow job, and has been further delayed by a very heavy fall of rain the night before last, which has made the roads as slippery as glass and well nigh impassable for laden elephants. Our difficulties increase as we get on; the country seems to get if possible more jungly and the hills steeper and higher than ever, whilst the rivers cease to be navigable. We have luckily had a great accession of strength to our coolie corps by the arrival of 400 hillmen, the remnants of the ill-fated 850 who suffered so much from cholera. The sickliest of the lot were weeded out and sent back to their homes, and none but strong active young fellows, principally Gurkhas with a few Blue-teas, have been brought on. They arrived here on the 5th instant under Major Moore and Captain Hedayit Ali, and went on their way on the 7th. They ought to prove most valuable, as the numbers of the coolies laid up from various causes increases every day, and the sick list in the depot hospital includes 148 coolies besides 38 sent back to Cachar and about 40 or 50 attending hospital. On the same day the left wing of the 22nd P.N.I. reached Tipai Mookh under Colonel O'Brien, relieving the head-quarters of the 41th, who started off on the 7th for No. 6 Station. Tipai Mookh is gradually getting emptied of troops; the artillery march to day, and the 42nd detachment in a few days, leaving only about 150 men of the 22nd to hold the place. The great drain of men arises from the necessity of supplying guards at the different camps; and what with guarding rassud and fatigue duties, road-making, &c., the troops are very hard worked. A great deal of nonsense has been both talked and written before the expedition about taking in so many men to fight a parcel of savages like the Loshais; but we find already that far from having one man in excess of our wants, we have not got nearly enough, and this whilst only a few miles removed from our base of operations. To supply merely the number of men required to make up one column, Assam has been almost entirely denuded of troops. A simple calculation shows that to protect its long line of frontier from Goalpara to Suddiya, the province can boast about one armed man to every mile and a half of frontier. The last news from the front is that the Loshais are collecting in force in front of our advance parties, but without as yet actually opposing us. The civil officers seem to think that they mean to submit, but I expect that there will be some fighting first. The gunners are in high spirits at getting off after vegetating at Tipai Mookh for nearly a month.—Pioneer Correspondent.

DELHI MANŒUVRES.

CAMP, NEAR DELHI, Jan. 20.—The inclemency of the weather on Monday and Tuesday last afforded a couple of days of rest to the wearied army. On Wednesday the 1st and 2nd Divisions remained at rest, but the 3rd, under General Tombs, were marched out to Loughree to determine the effect of cavalry and horse artillery in opposing the advance of a body of infantry, supported by a few field guns.

The cavalry with its attendant horse artillery occupied a strong position on the line of sand hills to the east of the village of Longhree, and between it and the camp, the haven of rest, while the infantry were marched by a circuitous route to the west, or rear of the village, from which it debouched. The advance was in excellent order, the main body as skirmishers, supports, and reserve, with the flanks protected by a battalion in echelon of companies and again by a battery of guns.

The cavalry brigade were powerless to check its advance, and a squadron of the Central India Horse, which charged in an attempt to take possession of the guns, were exterminated by the fire of the battalion. As nothing could be effected the infantry were able to attain their object—the camp—about sunset, after undergoing a hard day's marching.

Thursday inaugurated a new programme; three regiments, the 20th Hussars, the 72nd Highlanders, the 1st Goorkhas, and the Mountain Train, having been ordered to Umballa, it was considered advisable to break the three divisions into two, and to work on this new scale. According to it, Generals Travers and McMurdo, with one division, were to meet at Naraina on Thursday evening, while General Tombs with the other was to proceed to a place south of Delhi called Mehrowlee, a mile beyond the famous Kootub Minar.

On Friday General Travers was to march to Goorgaon, in a direction south-east from Delhi, and about eleven miles beyond Naraina. General Tombs was to molest him from Mehrowlee, while the former was en route.

General Tombs, after a reconnaissance of the ground, could have done so in a direction close to his camp, but as it might have forced an engagement and prevented the army under General Travers getting at all to Goorgaon, another position nearer to the end was occupied by the Mehrowlee force—which turned out by six, and marched down the road leading from the Kootub to Goorgaon till the turnpike was reached, when it struck off to its position. The right, consisting of three guns, the 32nd Pioneers, and the 65th Europeans, lay in front of the village of Dondakhera, with the 105th and the 3rd Goorkhas in reserve. Two squadrons of cavalry were put in front to draw the enemy out to attack this position. On the right of this village an impassable nullah runs from a low ridge of stoney hills, and thus rendered any attempt to turn the right impracticable. The left of the force rested on the village of Dowlutkhera, about a mile and a-half from the right. In it was posted the 20th N.I. and the other three guns of the battery. The cavalry, consisting of the 4th Hussars, the 1-46th B.C., and the Central India Horse, and Sir W. Hamilton's troop of artillery, worked still more to the left under Colonel Watson. This position was really so strong that had an engagement issued it would have, perhaps, been impracticable to the opposing force to have forced it, but General Travers, finding the main road, which passed close to the village of Dondakhera, closed, moved off his force to his right by the railway embankment, which ran parallel, but about two miles to the west of the road, his baggage passing still further to the west. His advance was so cautious at first, and the day becoming spent without General Tombs succeeding in drawing him into an engagement, that the latter, at three o'clock, ordered his infantry to march to camp and leave the road open to the adverse force. While the infantry started, General Tombs went off to the left to his cavalry brigade, and attacked the advancing force. In so doing a most brilliant charge between the whole forces of the cavalry occurred. Colonel Richardson, with the whole of General Travers's cavalry, and Colonel Watson with the other, charged fairly home, the Central India Horse and the 3rd B.C. actually passing through each other, the other parts of the line only halting when within a few paces of each other.

Colonel Richardson claimed the victory, as his forces overlapped the opponents. Colonel Watson, on the other hand, pointed out the fact that while Colonel Richardson had no reserves he had three squadrons who were able to charge the enemy in confusion after the melee. The umpire gave the charge equal, and the contending parties were separated; but such a sight as ten squadrons in each line charging home is not often seen in India.

General McMurdo, in the meanwhile, had advanced his force and occupied the village of Dondakhera, and to some extent cut off the cavalry brigade of General Tombs, but as the latter had retired his troops it was a knotty point, and one not decided, I believe, whether he was worsted or not in the fray.

The 3rd Division returned to camp dead-beat, this being the third heavy day's marching in succession. Saturday was employed by the 3rd Division in outpost duty, the 17th N.I. and the cavalry only being employed, the remainder of the troops taking advantage of the rest to climb to the top of the Kootub and ramble among the famous ruins of the place.

On Saturday evening a working party was ordered to dig a parallel, but it fell through from some cause or other.

On Monday morning, at 4 A.M., commences the next set of war manœuvres. General Travers becomes head umpire, and Generals' Tombs and McMurdo lead the contending forces. The former with his army is to consider himself as covering the foot of Tooluckabad, which is besieged—the force under General McMurdo is to relieve the small garrison in the place.

The only other items are that General Tombs is to preserve his communications and if beaten to retire by Kolka and Ooker across the river Jumna to the town of Ghazeabad.

The following is the strength of the forces:—

Cavalry.—4th Hussars, 1st Bengal Cavalry, Central India Horse.
Artillery.—D-D troop, E-19th and F-19th Field Battery.
Infantry.—65th and 105th Foot, 17th, 20th, 35th, 32nd, and 3rd Goorkhas.

UNDER GENERAL MCMURDO.

Cavalry.—11th Hussars, 6th, 8th, and 17th Bengal Cavalry.
Artillery.—E-F troop, F-16th, D-16th, D-19th Field Battery.
Infantry.—5th Foot, 92nd Highlanders, 109th Foot, and 3rd, 10th, 14th, 40th, and 45th Native Infantry.

Colonel Richardson, 6th B.C., has been appointed to command the Cavalry Brigade, 1st Division.

Lieut. J. V. V. Baker, R.A., has been appointed Extra A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief temporarily.

Colonel G. V. Johnson, R.A., has been appointed to a Brigade R.A., but is permitted, at his own request, to retain command of the Royal Artillery with the Camp of Exercise, until the breaking up of the camp.

Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. MacCampbell, R.A., has been appointed to the command of 6-13 R.A., and Lieut.-Col. and Brevet Col. H. A. Smyth, 8th Brigade, to command the R.A., 2nd Division, Camp of Exercise.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

EDUCATIONAL.—It is now settled that Dr. Leitner, Principal of the Lahore College, will, on Feb. 1, exchange appointments with Mr. Pearson, Inspector of Schools, Rawul Pindie Circle.

COMMISSARIAT ACCOUNTS.—The committee sitting in the office of the Examiner of Commissariat Accounts have nearly completed their report. It is said that other work will be found early next year for Colonel James.

POLITICAL.—An envoy from the King of Bokhara has just arrived in Calcutta; and one from the Attaligh Ghazee of Yarkund was already here. Two very important embassies so far as the frontiers are concerned, and indicative, we think, of an influence strong enough to affect the interests of nations considerably beyond the frontier.

GWALIOR.—It is reported from Gwalior that Sindia intends to have a small Camp of Exercise of his own at a place called Sosaira Barowa, wherever it may be, and that the British officials and several of the officers in Morar have been, or shortly will be, invited to witness the display.

URDU OR PERSIAN?—It is rumoured that a reference has lately been made to the High Court of Judicature by the Lieutenant-Governor as to the advisability or practicability of abolishing Urdu as the Court language in the Local Courts in the district of Behar, and of substituting the Persian language in its stead.

P. W. DEPARTMENT.—We see it stated that Colonel J. MacLeod Innes, R.E., will shortly proceed to England on leave, and that Colonel P. O'Connell, R.E., will then officiate as Accountant-General and Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, in the Department of Public Works. Captain G. S. Hills, R.E., also leaves Calcutta on furlough next month.

PENSIONS.—The Indian Daily News learns that the Secretary of State has intimated to the Government of India the desire of the Home Government to enforce strictly the rule prohibiting the appointment in India to the "pensionable" grades of the public service of any person who does not produce reliable evidence of physical fitness for duty.

A CURE FOR FEVER.—Very favourable results continue to be obtained from hypo-sulphate of soda in the treatment of jungle fever. A contemporary states that from a table of cases treated by Dr. Foster, at Nasserah, with it and with quinine, respectively, it would appear to effect a cure more rapidly than the latter remedy. The native remedy, lettagootie, appears, however, to be equally effectual.

WEATHER IN OUDH.—In the middle of the month the weather was very unpleasant at Lucknow, raining, clearing up, and cloudy again, and it is said the crops have suffered, and that if bad weather continued the wheat cultivation, which has luxuriantly grown around the city and its suburbs, will be completely destroyed. The price of all kinds of grain has risen in the market.

ALLAHABAD UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.—The long-talked of Allahabad University College is, we understand, to be started at once. There is some talk of forming the establishment of the College by diminishing those of existing colleges. This is welcome news for the Educational Department in the N.W. Provinces, who complain that the Benares, Agra, and Bareilly Colleges, already shorthanded, will be still further crippled by this move.—Englishman, Jan. 20.

RMOURD VENGANCE.—Amongst the natives in the neighbourhood of Lahore the rumour is that the whole Kooka sect have vowed to a man that they will neither sow crops or do a single thing for any one until Ram Singh, their Guru, and his Soobahs, now in custody, are released; some going so far as to say that they have sworn to try and attain their object even though they shed the last drop of blood amongst them.

ACCIDENT AT THE DELHI CAMP.—We are sorry to learn by letters from the Camp of Exercise, dated the 23rd, that General Olpherts met with a severe accident, breaking his leg when out the preceding day looking at the operations. We have not heard particulars how it occurred, but trust the gallant general will get well over it, and resume his command in Rohilcund. He is at present the guest of Lord Napier in camp.—Dehli Gazette, Jan. 25.

CAMP OF EXERCISE.—A correspondent, whom the Pioneer vouches for as a competent and impartial critic, sums up his impressions of the Delhi Camp of Exercise, as a test of strategy, thus:—"Considering the novelty of the exercise, I think it must be said that all three Generals have done well—General Travers conspicuously so. But, for [these Camps of Exercise to afford the instruction hoped from them, it is indispensable that umpires be specially trained to the performance of their all-important office."

RAJPOOTANA RAILWAY.—The first brick of the Jumna bridge of the Rajpootana State Railway was laid on the 18th Jan., by the contractors, Messrs. Glover and Co. The Jumna bridge is to consist of 16 spans, each of 142 feet from centre to centre of pier, with 1 span of 40 feet clear on each side of the bridge. The girders are to be supported on brick piers, each pier to consist of 3 brick cylinders abreast, each cylinder being 12 feet 6 inches in diameter; these cylinders will have to be sunk on strong iron curbs to a depth varying from 45 to 60 feet below the bed of the river. It is expected that this bridge will be finished by June 1874.

THE GONDS OF CENTRAL INDIA.—It is stated that in the Highlands of Central India the aboriginal races are estimated at about one million of souls, and of these 826,000 are Gonds, the remainder being made up of Kols, Korkus, Bygas, and Bheels. We (Delhi Gazette) also learn that the Bishop of Calcutta has planted a mission in the Gond country, near Ellichpore, and that a deacon (a converted Pundit of Benares, the Rev. Nehemiah Gorep) and a catechist are now stationed there.

CIVIL.—We read that the Hon. Mr. Drummond, brother of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, Commissioner of Bareilly, leaves for England on furlough by next mail. He will, it is said, probably not return to India. Mr. Forbes, C.B., late officiating Commissioner of Benares, will in the meantime act for him. Mr. Elliott Colvin, officiating Collector of Bareilly, and late Superintendent of the Terai, will also leave for England on furlough in March.

THE INDORE (STATE) RAILWAY.—We learn that the contractors for this line, Messrs. Hood and Co., made a start on Monday last, the 22nd Jan. The ceremony of "cutting the first sod" was, in the absence of any more prominent representative of Government, performed by Mr. H. Bell, the engineer of the first Division. The contractors gave a dinner to the people in the station on the same evening. Great numbers of work people are collected in and about Chundwa, and there is every sign of the works being vigorously pushed on.—Times of India.

A SUGGESTION.—Referring to the serious illness and recovery of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the Delhi Gazette says:—"In sober seriousness we suggest that, not the Prince of Wales but 'Baron Renfrew' be invited to pass the approaching summer in India. For obvious reasons we would have him lodged away from the Viceregal Court. We would place him in Bellevue at Mussoorie. Let him be the guest, not of the Viceroy, but of India. Let all India unite in inviting His Royal Highness to pass a quiet twelvemonth among us."

LADY CANNING'S TOMB.—We regret to state that the disgraceful practice of removing the coloured stones from the mosaic work on Lady Canning's tomb at Barrackpore, has apparently been revived. In three or four places the stones have been picked out of the cement to the extent of several inches; and the servant in charge states—we know not with what amount of truth—that the injury has been done by Europeans. We trust that the persons who are responsible for the preservation of this interesting monument, will endeavour to stay the work of destruction, by exposing and punishing any persons of whatever position guilty of this vandalism.—Friend of India.

DIFFICULTIES OF A LOSHAI CAMPAIGN.—We observe that Brig-General Bouchier, who arrived at Cachar on the 19th November, did not reach Tipai Mookh till the 12th December, although provided with Sappers and other means and appliances of making his way through the jungle. In justice to Major-General Nuthall, who in 1869 was so much blamed for not being quicker in his movements, it is right to draw attention to the fact that in less time than this after his arrival at Cachar he not only formed two columns of troops from Sylhet, Kumber Ghaut, and Shillong, but arrived with one column at Pukwa Mookh, if anything farther south than Tipai Mookh, and quite as difficult of approach, where the force was overtaken by incessant stormy weather. We mention this, not to disparage General Bouchier, but to show the difficult nature of the country, and do justice alike to both officers.—Friend of India.

DEATH OF MAJOR F. W. RUSSELL.—We regret to have to record the death, says our Jubbulpore contemporary, on the morning of the 15th instant, of Major F. W. Russell, of the late 3rd Bengal European Light Cavalry. As far as we have been able to ascertain, the deceased officer, who was the field officer of the week, left the mess about midnight on Monday for the purpose of visiting the guards, and was found early on the morning of the 15th lying on the road opposite the shop of Mr. Perrett, the jeweller, with his forehead fractured. A Court of Inquest was immediately convened by Colonel Forsyth, the brigade major, but, as it has not yet concluded its proceedings, we refrain from publishing any of the numerous reports current as to how the deceased came by his death. We strongly suspect that the vigilance of the police will be called in question by the Court of Inquest, of which Lieut. col. Ritherdon, 21st Madras N.L., is president.

THE KING OF SIAM AT CALCUTTA.—We understand that his Majesty the King of Siam and staff, together with the younger princes, paid a visit to the King of Oude's menagerie at Garden Reach yesterday morning. In the evening his Siamese Majesty attended a grand reception at Belvidere. It is probable that the King will visit the Alipore Jail and the Cathedral to-day; and to-morrow the Viceroy, accompanied by the King, his Ministers of State, and the Siamese Princes, will proceed to Barrackpore on board the str. Sir William Peel. On Sunday the King will visit the water-works at Pultah. His Majesty, we hear, will take leave of the Viceroy on the evening of the 22nd, and will start for Delhi by special train. His Majesty and suite were present at the ball given at Government House on Wednesday evening. On this occasion the Maharajah Kalikrishna, Rai Bahadur, of Sobha bazaar, read out aloud, with the permission of the Viceroy, a Sanscrit address of welcome to the King of Siam.

This done, a printed copy of the welcome was presented to his Excellency and to the King.—Indian Daily News, Jan. 26.—H.R.H. the King of Siam delights in sixty brothers, forty sisters, and thirty-two queens. His father, says the report, had three hundred queens.—Correspondent of the Rast Gofar.

THE COMING BUDGET.—There is a report afloat that in the Budget of the present year provision will be made for the continuance of the income-tax at a low rate. We do hope that the Governor General will himself step in before the matter goes too far, and insist absolutely that the income-tax shall cease. If it ceases at all, the cause will have to be in the Governor General. The Finance Department will cling to the tax to the last, if only from the boyish feeling that the Department "won't be beaten," and will show that it is beyond the reach of public opinion. But it will be beaten. We can quite sympathise with the view of the Commander-in-Chief, and other distinguished officers, who insist that wealthy Europeans and wealthy Natives should contribute their proper share to expenses which are for the common preservation and welfare. Find almost any other means of reaching either class—both classes—and there will not be a word to say against it; but this tax which the Finance Department clings to so affectionately has gone into every part of the Empire sowing discontent and animosity to British rule, and perpetrating oppression more general and cankering than anything of the kind ever known since our rule began. We entreat the Viceroy to put down his foot, as he can put it down, before it is too late, upon this accursed thing. The public feeling has had to grow on the subject. We ourselves a very short time ago were very much inclined to the view of the Commander-in-Chief—and indeed we are inclined to it yet, so far as the necessity of making rich men pay their fair share to the expenses of Government. But the facts that have come before us, not from the North-Western Provinces alone, but in letters from all parts of India "constrain" us, as the Financial Secretary would say, to appeal to the Viceroy himself to remove the income-tax at once and for ever from India. If the Financial Department stands in the way, better a thousandfold to break up that Department than to break up the Empire.—Friend of India.

STATION TALK.

MALABAR, Jan. 10.—The anticipated departure of Lord Napier from Madras is the pretext of some of the young princes of Travancore for their intended trip to the Presidency in March next. They are going, we are told, to pay the last visit to the governor; and Travancore pays all expenses; but the subjects of that State find it already a heavy burden to support the Royal family, irrespective of such unnecessary charges as would be incurred by the intended visit of the princes to Madras. Apròpos of the fact of this intention on the part of the princes of Travancore, it is rumoured that the Cochin princes intended likewise to visit Madras shortly, but there seems to be little likelihood that they will do so. In reference to my statement that Sir Madava Row has undoubtedly sent in his resignation to the Travancore Government, the Madras Standard observes as follows:—For the satisfaction of all parties, and especially of aspiring candidates to the Dewanship, we trust Sir Madava Row or the Travancore Government will set the public at rest and give publicity to the real facts of the supposed dispute, if there be any, between the Dewan and his Highness of Travancore. So far as we can see, this is precisely what neither the Dewan nor the Travancore Sircar intend to do—what, in fact, Sir Madava Row is prevented by circumstances from doing. To the "public," however, the whole truth appears to lie in a nut-shell; the dispute may be traceable to a feeling akin to jealousy in his Highness of Travancore towards his Dewan. Sir Madava Row's growing popularity, and the able manner in which he has conducted the administration since he had been placed at its helm, appear to have eclipsed the name and fame of his Royal master. Hence it might seem that the unamiable feeling on the part of the Maharajah of Travancore towards his Dewan originated in and increased proportionately with the increase of Sir Madava Row's popularity, and has at last forced the latter to tender his resignation. Whether the resignation has been accepted I am not able to say, but the Maharajah holds it, and it is more than probable that Sir Madava Row will leave office in March or April. The boundary disputes between the Travancore and Cochin Governments have now existed for upwards of a quarter of a century, and their settlement seems to be as remote now as twenty-five years ago. I shall on another occasion particularise the disputes, but shall only state at present that Mr. Ballard, the British Resident, has officially called upon the Dewans of Travancore and Cochin to submit detailed reports regarding them. The disputes are, I may as well state in a general way, in respect to the possession of certain tracts of land by the Cochin Government, which the Travancore Sircar claim as theirs. Education is making rapid strides in Travancore, as the establishment of a great number of district schools indicate. Sir Madava Row now notifies, that "with a view to induce Mohammedan youths to enter his Highness the Maharajah's High School at Trevandrum, it has been resolved to open classes for Hindustanee and Persian after the holidays. It is hoped that the facilities thus afforded will be largely availed of." The Warkully Canal in Travancore was commenced in the latter part of 1870. In 1871 the work was continued, and the end of the past year found it well advanced. A writer states that the excavations are all completed, and that the tunnelling, which is the most difficult part of the work, is now commenced under the supervision of Mr. Summers and Mr. Nicholls, two of the most experienced hands in this particular and important work. The Dewan of Travancore is opening a coffee estate in Nedduvengad. He has extensive property in Travancore, and it is believed that on his retirement he will not leave the country, but remain on one of his estates, or at Trevandrum. The following suggestions, which are worth consideration, have been made to the Travancore Government. It would be a great saving of labour in the present clearing out and deepening of the canals if steam dredges were introduced. There is much to be done, too, in the way of improvement, with the shallow backwaters. Could not banks be constructed which would prevent the ingress of salt water, and these sites given as settlements to fresh colonies of industrious cultivators? Give them enough land for a hut, and a marsh to cultivate capable of irrigation and free from salt water, and I venture to say that marshy land would soon be turned into profitable paddy fields, and the revenue of the State increased.—Indian Statesman Correspondent.

MEMORIAL TO MR. NORTON.—The native community of Madras have subscribed Rs. 1,800 for the establishment of a scholarship in memory of the Hon. J. B. Norton, ex-Advocate General.

CIVIL.—We (Bangalore Spectator) learn that Mr. Robert Ellis, C.B., Chief Secretary to Government, Madras, accompanies Lord Napier to England in March next, and will return after a long absence.

MR. T. S. BOILEAU.—We are glad to learn that the Secretary of State for India has, on the recommendation of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s Forces, conferred on Mr. T. S. Boileau, Assistant Conservator of Forests, Kurnool District, an ensigncy in H.M.'s 54th Regiment of Foot, at present stationed at Jullundur, N.W.P. Mr. T. S. Boileau is the son of the late Colonel J. E. M. Boileau, Superintending Engineer at Cuddalore, who died a few months back at that station, and grandson to the late Judge Boileau, one of the Judges of the late Sudder Adawlut Court of Madras.—Madras Mail, Jan. 19.

THE INDIAN BAR.—The new Evidence Bill now before the Council of the Governor-General has called forth a memorial from a large number of barristers-at-law and advocates of the Calcutta High Court, protesting against certain sections of the proposed enactment by which they say their rights and privileges, enjoyed by them from time immemorial, will be seriously injured and jeopardised. What the effect of the memorial to the Governor in Council will be is yet to be seen. We believe, however, there is a difference of opinion with regard to the provisions contained in the sections of the new bill which are objected to, and that some are of opinion that they will not operate in the objectionable manner the memorialists assume they will. With a difference of opinion thus existing on this matter, it is difficult to anticipate what will be the result of the memorial to the Council. The probability is that Mr. Stephen, the author of the measure, and himself a barrister-at-law, will carry his bill by a majority. While on this subject we may mention another matter in connection with the legal profession at Calcutta which is at present under consideration. The Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, the Hon. Sir Richard Couch, is stated to be about to introduce some changes in the rules affecting attorneys and vakeels of his Court, by which the status and privileges of these gentlemen will be affected; whether beneficially or otherwise in the opinion of the parties concerned has not transpired.—Madras Athenæum.

FIRE AT THE P. AND O. COMPANY'S DOCKYARD MAZAGON.

At about half-past seven o'clock on Monday evening smoke was noticed proceeding from the import stores of the P. and O. Company's Dockyard at Mazagon. An alarm of fire was at once given, and the European employees of the company living in the barracks close by speedily broke open the middle entrance door and the fire was found to be raging fiercely inside, no one being able to effect an entrance. The building was filled with stores in the shape of oil, turpentine, ether, resin, rope, signal rockets, tallow, and other combustible materials. On the alarm of fire being given, the company's dockyard employes at once set a steam fire engine belonging to the company to work, which had been, with some difficulty, dragged out from a shed next the burning store room; the sluice gates of a small dock, some forty yards from the store buildings, being opened, a plentiful supply of salt water was obtained. Shortly after, the Mazagon steam fire engine with a small manual engine, arrived, speedily followed by the Mandavi and Fort steam fire engines with another manual engine. These took up their station near the dock, bringing incessant streams of water to bear upon the blazing building. The fire at about 9.30 P.M. had been partially extinguished. Almost immediately after, a terrific explosion took place, scattering the corrugated iron roofing, blazing rafters, and ether cans in all directions. Two strong iron boxes containing rockets and blue-lights were the cause of this. Their contents, owing to the intense heat, exploded with a deafening noise, scattering debris far and wide. The lid of one of the boxes, weighing some two hundredweight, was carried a distance of about 80 yards, falling on the top of the engineer's workshop, forcing its way through the roof on to the first floor, and igniting a number of spare planks stored in the pattern room, and making a hole about two feet circumference in the floor. Fortunately, the fire here was at once put out, otherwise the consequences must have been disastrous, as the whole of the third floor compartment is filled with planks and carpenters' materials. The massive piece of iron appears to have struck the workshop roof first near the east end, making a rent in the roof, and rebounding from there fell again about six or eight feet further from the place where it first struck, making a large rent about three feet by two, through which it fell red hot on to the floor beneath. Pieces of the iron roof of the store room were scattered far and wide by the force of the explosion, and next morning were to be seen all crumpled and distorted in parts of the yard. Streams of water were now directed on the building with redoubled effort, and at about midnight nothing remained but portions of the bare walls; inside these there was nothing but a charred and blackened mass. The greater portion of the walls, which were upwards of two feet thick, and built of stone, were blown down by the force of the explosion. The next store room was only saved by the partition wall holding out, but the majority of the stores had been taken out as soon as the alarm of fire was given. A small godown near the burning building used by kallasies as a sleeping place caught fire, which, however, was speedily extinguished. The Mazagon fire engine remained on the scene until about 3 o'clock on Tuesday morning, pouring a continuous stream of water on the ruins to prevent any further outbreak. Four or five men were injured by the explosion of a can of ether, Police-constable Austin and the gunner and carpenter of the S.S. Ellora being severely scorched. The loss cannot at present be estimated, as it is not known what quantity of stores were destroyed, but it is undoubtedly a heavy one. It is still uncertain how the fire originated. The stores were shut up as usual at about 5.30 P.M., the alarm of fire being first given about two hours after. The store-room which was destroyed was a room about fifty feet long and fourteen broad, built entirely of stone. Great praise is awarded by those present to the members of the fire-brigades for their untiring exertions in order to prevent the fire from spreading. A number of coolies were employed all day yesterday in clearing away the debris. The stores consumed consisted principally of cans of ether and turpentine, tallow, and rope.—Times of India, Jan. 29.

RAILWAYS.—The Government of India have sanctioned the appointment of a Chief Engineer and staff with the requisite establishment, for the survey of the Rohree-Kotree section of the Indus Valley State Railway.

THE KATRIZ TANK WATER.—We understand that only twenty feet of water is now in the Katriz tank. In one week alone two feet of water was consumed for the use of the city inhabitants. At this rate, we are afraid that there will prevail scarcity of water in the city in the event of there being no fall of rain between this and the setting in of the monsoons. We therefore hope that the city municipality will see the advisability of supplying the city residents with water, as the Katriz tank will no doubt be soon entirely consumed, owing to the scanty fall of rain last monsoon. The springs that supplied the Katriz tank from the hills are nearly dried up.—Poona Observer.

THE NATIONAL FINANCIAL OF INDIA.—At the High Court on Thursday, Jan. 24, before the Hon. Mr. Justice Bayley, Mr. Marriott, instructed by Messrs. Rimington, Hore, and Langley, on behalf of some contributories of the National Financial of India, appeared to argue against a summons taken out some days ago by Mr. T. F. Punnett, the official liquidator, requiring the contributories to show cause why a call of Rs. 40 per share should not be made upon them. Mr. Scoble, instructed by Messrs. Keir, Prescott and Winter, on behalf of the liquidator, appeared in support of the summons. His Lordship made an order that a further call of Rs. 40 per share should be paid by the contributories.

INDIA'S PRESENT TO THE QUEEN.—The great historical painting of the installation of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh as a K.G.C.S.I., which is intended as a national Indian gift to H.M. the Queen, is being finished in Bombay. The artist, Mr. W. M. White, has been working on his picture in Bombay for the past five months, and though it has not received the finishing touches, the painting is to be seen at the Byculia hotel. The cost of the picture will be Rs. 25,000, of which Rs. 16,000 has already been subscribed. The picture has cost the artist upwards of fifteen months' labour and expenses; the receipts have as yet necessarily been inadequate to his everyday wants, whilst engaged in painting and travelling to meet the several sitters and supporters of the undertaking; and his Excellency Lord Mayo, seeing the urgency of the situation, has kindly consented to a committee being appointed, of which he has graciously consented to be president, in order to assist Mr. White in getting in collections and increasing the number of subscribers to the engraving. Mr. White has appealed to the community of Bombay to render him assistance to enable him to complete the picture, and we are glad to say that several of our most influential men have responded handsomely to the call.

THE ENGLISH MAIL.—The Indian Postmaster General, Mr. Monteath, arrived in Bombay on Friday evening by the Columbian, having come through from England with the first Indian mail sent by way of the Mont Cenis Tunnel. If Mr. Monteath used his eyes on the way he must, we should imagine, have satisfied himself that nothing could be easier than to reduce the length of time required for the conveyance of the mail from London to Bombay by the route now in use from 21 to 17 or at the outside 18 days. As the efforts of the English Post office seem to be directed to accelerating the mail on the home side, between London and Alexandria, and the fact that twenty-four hours had been saved by the adoption of the Mont Cenis route was thought of sufficient importance to be telegraphed to India. But Mr. Monteath must have discovered, what is perfectly plain to every passenger in a P. and O. Company's steamer, that the loss of twice twenty-four hours is considered a matter of no consequence between Suez and Bombay. While the time from Alexandria to London has been reduced from ten days to six, the mail steamers are still allowed their fourteen days to do the voyage comfortably in, from Suez to Bombay. The 825 miles from Brindisi to Alexandria are covered in three days, and, at the same rate of speed, a steamer should take only eleven days to run the distance of 2,972 miles from Suez to this port. Why, then, when so much activity is shown on the Continent and on the Mediterranean, is the purely Indian portion of the service so utterly neglected? It can only be a question of money whether the P. and O. steamers run nine and a half or eleven knots in the Indian Ocean; and we surely pay enough for the postage of our letters and papers to be entitled to the highest rate of speed that can be got out of the mail packets. Besides, the cost of working steamers has been so greatly reduced since the new contract was given to the P. and O. Company, that it should be no heavier a burden to them to run their ships eleven knots now than it was to run their nine and a half knots four years ago.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 29.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, Jan. 29.—The continued firmness in the Home markets has induced a slightly better inquiry for Grey Goods, and the clearances for the week are quite up to the average. Twist, being in very light supply, is firmly held, and, even with the present small demand, values are as $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ per lb. higher on the week. In Metals there is but a moderate business to report, but values are fairly steady.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, Jan. 29.—Cotton: The tenor of the English intelligence has rendered dealers very firm, and prices may be quoted Rs. 2 to 5 per candy higher for New Cotton. The arrivals continue liberal for the season, especially of Omrawuttee descriptions. From Dhollerah the reports continue favourable. Wool: Prices may be quoted Rs. 30 to 35 per candy higher, but at this level exporters seem afraid to operate, and our quotation may be regarded as nominal. In other articles of Export there is no change worthy of notice.

MONEY MARKET.—BOMBAY, Jan. 29.—EXCHANGE: A fair amount of business has been done, at an advance of $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on last quotations. On Calcutta the rates for Bank's drafts are, on demand, 3-16 per cent. premiums, and 60 days' sight 14 per cent. discount. The rate on China for 60 days' sight House Bills is Rs. 216 per 100 dollars.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE CAMP OF DELHI.

Head Quarters, Camp, Delhi, Jan. 15.—The camp now formed at Delhi will break up on Feb. 1; the troops in camp proceeding to their respective destinations.

CAMP OF EXERCISE—POSITION OF BATTERIES BEFORE ACTION.

Head-quarters, Camp, Delhi, Jan. 16.—When batteries march in the vicinity of the enemy, the spare carriages, men, and horses should be placed under the charge of the quartermaster sergeant, with whom the captain of the battery should keep up communication, in order that when required these carriages may be at hand, or join the battery in camp at the close of the operations of the day.

When batteries on the move approach the enemy, and an engagement is anticipated, they should halt and prepare.

Application should now be made to the general in command for an escort which may be suitable to the occasion.

The captain commanding the battery should now make over to the charge of an officer, if one is available, the first line of wagons. If no officer can be spared, some responsible non-commissioned officer will direct them.

The wagons will follow the guns at a distance which must be regulated by the nature of the ground: cover should be sought where available, but constant communication must be kept up, and they should not be allowed to be forced out of the way by other troops, or to drop too far to the rear, lest the guns in action should be separated from their supplies of ammunition.

When it is perceived that an engagement is imminent, a communication should be made to the detached carriages, &c.

It is of the utmost importance that the officer or non-commissioned officer should be aware of the situation of the battery, and that the commander of the battery should at all times know where to find his depot of ammunition stores, spare men, &c.

Col. G. V. Johnson, who has been appointed to A brigade R.H.A., is permitted, at his own request, to retain the command of the Royal Artillery with the Camp of Exercise until the breaking up of the camp.

THE VICEEROY'S LETTER TO THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head-quarters, Camp, Delhi, Jan. 18.—The C. in C. in India has much pleasure in publishing, for the information of all under his command, the following copy of a letter received from H.E. the Viceroy:—

Jan. 13.—My Lord,—I cannot allow a day to pass without expressing to your Excellency the pride and gratification with which I witnessed the magnificent appearance of the large body of troops now assembled at Delhi under your Excellency's command for the purpose of exercise and instruction.

The health and spirits of the men appeared to be excellent, the condition of the horses splendid, while the camp equipment seemed to be well organised and thoroughly efficient.

Both at the review and in the manoeuvres every man strove to do his best; and if so much zeal and energy are displayed in mimic warfare, it is easy to conceive the spirit which would pervade such a force were it engaged in conflict for the honour of its sovereign or the safety of its country.

The army is assembled close to a position which fifteen years ago was the scene of a military exploit, which has never been surpassed, where every spot is associated with recollections of a victory.

I rejoiced to find among all those with whom it was my good fortune to converse, a general concurrence of opinion as to the great practical value of the assemblage of our troops.

Late events in Europe have shown that careful and constant practice is as necessary for the attainment of perfection in the art of war as it is in every other pursuit or calling. Soldiers can no longer be looked on as machines. They must know what they are doing; men must be willing to learn and officers ready to teach. It can never be denied that intelligence and knowledge are not only compatible with, but conducive to, that strict discipline and implicit obedience which are the main elements of military strength.

In the efforts which are being made to spread among all ranks of the Queen's army sound professional instruction, the Government is fortunate in being able to command the services of a Commander-in-Chief so experienced as your Lordship, and who is so desirous of improving in every respect the condition of the British soldier, both European and native.

Several of the officers now serving under your Excellency's command have learnt by the rough teaching of many a tough fight. I know enough of their high characters and distinguished careers to feel assured that your wishes and orders will be given full effect to, and that no effort will be spared to turn to the best account the many advantages which in this Camp of Instruction the Government offers to the army.

In the name, then, of her Majesty's Indian Government I thank the officers and men of the splendid force under your Lordship's command for the exertion they have already made, and beg to express my hopes that the manoeuvres of 1872 will terminate as successfully as they have begun.—I remain, ever most faithfully,

(By order)

F. THESIGER, Adjutant-general.

THE ARTILLERY IN INDIA.

The distribution of the British cavalry and infantry having been now settled, and the number of batteries of Royal Artillery in India being fixed for probably some years to come, the Gov. gen. in Council, after consulting the C. in C. in India and the Governments of Madras and Bombay, has, we learn from Calcutta, been pleased to lay down the appended list of distribution for the three Presidencies:—

Madras.—There will be no alteration, by the desire of the local Government, in the distribution of the artillery borne in the establishment of this Presidency after the reliefs of the present season have been carried out.

Bombay.—The Government of Bombay proposes to leave the batteries distributed as at present, except that next year it would move one of the two field batteries from Ahmedabad to Hyderabad in Scinde, whence last year a battery was taken away without relief, when five batteries of horse artillery went home. This will restore to Scinde its previous complement of two batteries, while Ahmedabad can very well do with one. The head quarters of brigades of R.A. in Bombay will then be at Kirkee, Ahmedabad, and Bombay.

Bengal.—The foregoing distribution for Madras and Bombay will leave the following batteries for Bengal:—Eleven batteries horse artillery, twenty-two batteries field artillery, fifteen batteries garrison artillery, two of the latter being attached to heavy batteries, and two to mountain batteries. The distribution of the Artillery in the Bengal presidency, proposed by H.E. the C. in C., is as follows:—

Rawul Pindee Division.—Four field and two garrison batteries.

Sirhind Division.—Two horse, one field, and one garrison, with mountain battery attached.

Gwalior District.—One horse, one field, and two garrison batteries.

Saugor District.—Two field batteries.

Rohtak Division.—One field battery.

Presidency District.—Two field and two garrison batteries.

DISTRICT COURTS.—In private circles we have heard some complaints made as to the tardiness of justice in some of our district courts. The nearer the light the greater the darkness, and it is in one or two of the very near districts that these complaints have been made. Is it the fault of our Government? Is it, that very young and junior civilians just fresh from England without being allowed time to get acquainted with the procedure of law courts, or the language of the people, are too soon placed in magisterial charge of districts, or is this subject of complaint to be ascribed to other causes, to certain inherent defects in the present judicial system and machinery of our district law courts? The subject is, under any circumstances, very well worthy of discussion, and assuredly very fit for improvement.—Times of India.

THE ALBERT ARBITRATION.—On Feb. 14, Lord Cairns, sitting as arbitrator, delivered two judgments in which important interests were involved. The first point was whether directors taking shares in trust could, if made contributories, demand an indemnity from the company for whom they took the shares; and the second was whether shareholders in a general partnership or a joint-stock association were to be considered limited to a certain amount. The first case was an application on the part of three directors of the Western Assurance Company that they might be indemnified by that company with respect to 767 shares, for which they had been put as contributories on the Albert list. Lord Cairns, in delivering judgment, said that, with regard to the 240 Camroux shares, inasmuch as the Western was to take all the property of the Metropolitan Counties, and to take also all their liabilities, and as these were trust shares transferred to the Western trustees, the three applicants must be indemnified; but with regard to the other shares, the debts which the Western was now asked to contribute to, arose from the fact that these shares were transferred in trust to the applicants because the holders refused to exchange their shares in the Metropolitan, and preferred to sell them, and in doing this the applicants acted as trustees, which was entirely ultra vires, and they must have known that it was so. He could not allow them to be indemnified by assets which properly belonged to the Western shareholders. He said nothing as to the costs.—The second case was of an entirely different character. It appeared that after the amalgamation of the Western with the Albert, Messrs. Freer and Schaler became shareholders in the latter company to a small amount, and it was contended that in consequence of this they had no right to come upon the Western. It was urged on their behalf that the Albert was only liable to the Western for the amount of the joint-stock which it possessed, and that when this was exhausted the creditors could come upon the Western. Lord Cairns agreed with this latter view, and said that the old debt still remained to the applicants although they had shares in the Albert. The costs would be costs in the liquidation.

THE MURDER OF LORD MAYO.

His Grace the Duke of Argyll has forwarded the following despatch to the Government of India, on the subject of the assassination of Lord Mayo:—

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

My Lord,—I have learnt, with the deepest grief, that his Excellency the Earl of Mayo, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, was, on the 8th instant, assassinated by a convict at Port Blair, on the Andaman Islands, whilst his lordship was on an official visit of inspection to the convict establishment there.

In this calamitous event her Majesty's Government has to deplore the loss, in the prime of life, and in the midst of his career, of a statesman whose faithful and laborious discharge of the duties of his great office was animated by the warmest loyalty to his Sovereign, by constant devotion to the interests of her Indian subjects, and by a sincere desire to conduct with justice and consideration the relations of the Queen's Government with the native Princes and States of India. Lord Mayo's exertions for these ends have been marked with great success, and have not been surpassed by the most zealous labours of any of his most distinguished predecessors at the head of the Government of India.

The painful impression produced by this most melancholy catastrophe is so fresh, and my information relating to it so scanty, that I confine this despatch to an expression of the deep sorrow felt by my colleagues in the Council of India, and by myself, at the loss of this eminent public servant.—I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

India-office, London, Feb. 15, 1872.

THE LATE VICEROY OF INDIA.

The deceased nobleman was born in the city of Dublin on the 21st of February, 1822, so that he was within a few days of completing the fiftieth year of his age. His mother was Anne Charlotte, only child of the late Hon. John Jocelyn, and granddaughter of Robert, first Earl of Roden. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his degree as Bachelor and Master of Arts in the regular course, and was created a Doctor of Laws in 1852; he was for a short time a Gentleman of the Bedchamber to the late Lord Heytesbury while that nobleman held the Lord Lieutenantcy of Ireland, and entered Parliament at the general election of 1847 in the Conservative interest as one of the members for the county of Kildare, in which a large portion of the estates of the Bourkes is situated. He did not, however, again contest that county in 1852, but was content to sit during the next Parliament as member for the borough of Coleraine. He continued to represent Coleraine down to the general election of 1857, when he transferred his services to the electors of Cookermouth, in which borough the interest of the Wyndhams, with whom he was connected by marriage, was paramount. Here he enjoyed a secure seat, representing that constituency down to the year 1868, when he accepted the Governor-Generalship of India. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland under Lord Derby's first Administration from March to December, 1852, again under his second Administration in 1858, and for a third time in 1866.

Lord Mayo's accession to the family honours in the month of August, 1867, did not remove him from the House of Commons, as he was not a peer of England or of the United Kingdom. He married in October, 1848, the Hon. Blanche Julia Wyndham, fourth daughter of George, first Lord Leconfield, by whom he has left a family of two daughters and four sons, all under age. He is succeeded in his titles and estates by his eldest son, Dermot Robert Wyndham, Lord Naas, a cornet in the 10th Hussars, who was born in July, 1851, and was educated at Eton.

The Bourkes, of county Kildare, whom Lord Mayo represented, have been connected by the ties of family and property with that county ever since the "troubles" of 1641, when their ancestor, John Bourke, a son of Bourke of Monycrower, county Mayo, and a descendant of the Bourkes of Ballinrobe, and having held a captaincy of horse under Lord Ormonde, settled at Kill, county Kildare. His son became "of Palmerstown," near Naas, which is still the seat of the family; and his grandson, the Right Hon. John Bourke, of Kill and Moneybrower, was raised to the Irish Peerage as a Baron, and subsequently advanced to the Viscountcy and Earldom. The third Lord Mayo became in his day Archbishop of Tuam, and his son, the grandfather of the late Governor-general, was Bishop of Waterford and Lismore down to his decease, in November, 1832.

Miscellaneous.

WILL OF THE EARL OF ELLENBOROUGH.—The will of the Right Hon. Edward, second Baron and first Earl of Ellenborough, has recently been proved under £60,000, by the two executors, the Right Hon. Reginald Charles Baron Colchester, and Sir Robert Charles Dallas, Bart. The will is dated May 1, 1868, by which he desired that his body might be interred in the chancel of his chapel at Southam, Delabere, but if that should not be practicable, then in the churchyard of Oxenton. The late earl gave various annuities to his friends and acquaintances, which he charged on his estates at Southam, and subject to those annuities entailed the Southam estates on Edward Richmond and Ellen Mary Richmond, successively, and in default of their issue on Eva Law and Agnes Law, successively, with gifts over to the collateral members of his family. By a codicil, dated October 25, 1870, the earl bequeathed four legacies of £5,000 each upon trust for the benefit of the four persons mentioned in the entail of the Southam estates.

THE LATE LORD MAYO.—It is understood that the Queen has conveyed to the widowed lady, who has borne herself so nobly in the midst of her cruel trial, the sympathy which her Majesty well can feel and express in such a case. Various names have been mentioned in reference to the successor to the Viceregal Throne of the Empire, which the leading journal oddly styled a "province." The Duke of Argyll, who was wrongly suspected of coveting it, would not go there unless under a great pressure of the sense that no one else was fit to fill it. Lord Dufferin's health suffered in Syria, and, any way, with all his accomplishments and ability, the sort of a man who may be called, without injustice, "too weak for the place." Lord Kimberley would be but "a poor dry stick" after Lord Mayo, whose genial yet stately manner and fine presence were peculiarly adapted to charm and win orientals, and the defects which prevented Lord Wodehouse being popular in Russia or considered as more than a hard-working Chief Clerk in Ireland, are developed in Lord Northbrook, who is named among the likely men, but there is no doubt of his power of work, ability, and administrative talent. The choice is difficult, and the responsibility is great, for India needs all the best energies of our best men.—Army and Navy Gazette.

AN INDIAN MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.—GILCHRIST v. HERBERT.—Judgment was given in this case on Feb. 12. The suit was instituted for the purpose of establishing a pre-nuptial contract. The case of the plaintiff is that James Gilchrist, who is now deceased, in 1861 gave a written promise to the plaintiff that if she would marry him he would settle on her £10,000 for pin money, and by his will give her half his property; that she trusted to his promise, and did marry him, and that he has died making a will, and has left her nothing. The question to be ascertained was whether Mr. Gilchrist ever made this promise. After commenting on the points raised, the Judge said: "The plaintiff is entitled to a decree according to the prayer of her bill. The suit has been occasioned solely by the testator, and his estate must bear all the costs of both sides; for, unquestionably, the defendants were right in defending the suit, and requiring the promise to be strictly proved. The division of the residue will be made after the payment of the costs, one-half of which residue will go to the defendants and one-half to the plaintiff. The Solicitor-General, Mr. Serjeant Parry, Mr. Bathurst, Mr. Morgan Howard, and the Hon. W. F. B. Massey were for the plaintiff; Sir Richard Baggalay, Q.C., and Mr. Ince for the defendants. It was stated that the estate exceeds £140,000."

THE LATE ADMIRAL COCKBURN.—Rear-Admiral James Horsford Cockburn, the naval commander-in-chief on the East India station, died at the Government House, Calcutta, on Saturday. On the following afternoon the remains of the gallant admiral were interred with the usual honours in the military cemetery. The late admiral was left behind at the Presidency in ill health when his flag-ship, the Glasgow, proceeded to the Andaman Islands with the late Viceroy, the Earl of Mayo, who about the same time deplorably lost his life by the hand of a convict assassin. Admiral Cockburn was appointed to the command-in-chief on the East India Station, September 16, 1870. He entered the navy in 1829, and was promoted to lieutenant in 1840 for his conduct as senior mate at the affair of Coiffer, on the coast of Syria. He was also present at the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre. He afterwards served in the Winchester, 50, in the battle of the Parana, and having been flag lieutenant to the Hon. Joceline Percy, C.B., when commander-in-chief at the Cape of Good Hope for two years, had the "haul down" promotion. As commander he served in the Hastings, 72, flagship in the East Indies, from April, 1848, until posted in 1850. He had command of the Cossack, 20, in the Baltic, and on the North America and West India station; from August, 1855, to August, 1857; commanded the Diadem, 32, in the Channel squadron and West Indies, from October, 1859, to October, 1861, and was commodore at the Cape from October, 1861, until promoted to flag rank, April 6, 1866. Rear-Admiral Arthur Cumming, C.B., has been appointed to succeed the late Rear-Admiral Cockburn, C.B., as Naval Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, Feb. 12.—ASSASSINATION OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.—The Duke of ARGYLL, having read the telegraphic despatch regarding the murder of Lord Mayo, proceeded to express the deep sympathy felt by the Government for the family of Lord Mayo in the affliction that had fallen upon them. This House, he said, is full of the personal friends of the noble lord; for I believe that very few men ever had more friends, and that none deserved them better. For myself, I regret to say that I had not even the honour of an acquaintance with Lord Mayo; but we came into office almost precisely at the same time, and our official communications have always been of a most friendly and most cordial character. My lords, I might go further, and say that there has been no very serious difference of opinion between us on any question relating to the government of India. I hope it will not be thought out of place, considering the official position which I held towards the noble lord, if I say that I think and believe, and on the part of her Majesty's Government declare, that the conduct of Lord Mayo in his great office—the greatest, in my opinion, that can be held by a subject of her Majesty—amply justified the choice which was made by our predecessors. (Cheers.) My lords, Lord Mayo's governorship did not fall upon times of great trial or difficulty, arising from foreign war or domestic insurrection; but he had to bear the difficulties and the great anxieties which are inseparable from the government of that mighty empire. I believe I may say with perfect truth that no Governor-general has ever been more energetic in the discharge of his duty, has been more assiduous in the performance of the functions of his office, and, above all, has had more earnestly at heart the good of the people whom he was called on to govern. (Cheers.) I believe that Lord Mayo has, in fact, fallen a victim to an almost excessive anxiety for the efficient discharge of public duty. If he had a fault, it was that he would leave nothing to others, but would see everything for himself. On his way to Burmah, he thought it his duty to visit the convict establishment which had been set up at the Andaman Islands, in order to see what was its condition, and how far the rules of prison discipline were carried out there. It was in the discharge of that duty that he met with his death. My lords, I look on that death as a calamity to the people of India, which will be sincerely mourned not only by his friends in this country and in his native country, Ireland, but by all well-intentioned and well-affected subjects of her Majesty in her great Eastern Empire. (Loud cheers.)—The Duke of Richmond said: My lords, if her Majesty's Government feel deep sympathy for the relations and friends of Lord Mayo, how much more must I share that feeling, who lived for so many years on terms of the most intimate friendship and affection with him? (Cheers.) My lords, it will be gratifying to the noble earl's family to learn from the lips of my noble friend the Secretary of State for India that the Government of her Majesty appreciated his merits during the time he was Governor of India, and believed that his conduct amply justified the choice of him and the hopes which were formed of his administration when he was selected by her Majesty's late Government for the office. (Cheers.) My lords, I feel that he has left behind him a name second to none of those illustrious men who went before him, and, small as that consolation may be, it will be some consolation to his family to know how well he fulfilled the expectations of his friends. (Cheers.) My lords, I feel too deeply to say more, but I could not altogether remain silent on this occasion. (Cheers.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Feb. 12.—ASSASSINATION OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.—The House met at four o'clock, and immediately accompanied the new Speaker to the House of Lords. Shortly after his return, Mr. GLADSTONE read the telegram announcing the assassination of Lord Mayo, which he spoke of as an act of individual fanaticism. Though leaving to the Duke of Argyll the duty of doing full justice to Lord Mayo's eminent services, the Prime Minister expressed his appreciation of the loss the public service has sustained, and his conviction that Lord Mayo's career in India was worthy of his most distinguished predecessors. He had displayed the utmost zeal, intelligence, and devotion, and his whole policy had won for him the uniform confidence of the public.—Mr. DISRAELI, speaking with much emotion, described the event as "one of those calamities which saddened nations."—Col. SYKES observed that the Viceroy had met his death on his way from Rangoon to Burmah, and that it was the result of fanaticism, and had no political significance whatever.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, Feb. 13.—BONUS COMPENSATION TO INDIAN OFFICERS.—Mr. G. DUFF, in reply to Colonel SYKES, informed the House that the Secretary of State for India had determined not to grant bonus compensation to officers of the Indian army on other terms than those set forth in the despatch of Sir S. Northcote, dated in May, 1867.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, Feb. 15.—Mr. A. S. AYRTON moved for and obtained his "Select Committee to Inquire into Indian Finance."

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, Feb. 16.—THE PAUMBEN CHANNEL.—Sir J. ELPHINSTONE rose to call attention to the necessity for opening the Paumben Channel, and thereby facilitating the trade from Europe to the ports situated in the Bay of Bengal.—Mr. KNATCHBULL-HUGHESSEN said, in reply, that the real difficulty was not so much doubt as to the desirability of opening this channel as who was to do it. As far as Ceylon was concerned, it was not very likely the colony would be able to pay for it; the Indian Government could decide for itself, and as for the Imperial Government the hon. gentleman had done good service in calling its attention to the matter.—The subject then dropped.

among the Mussulmans of India, there is a freemasonry of hatred which may at any time have dangerous consequences. On such a subject it is impossible to speak with any confidence, but it will occur to all of us, after the first shock of the intelligence is over, that there is nothing in this crime which need cause political apprehension. It was probably the vengeance of a ferocious ruffian who finds that the chief of the Government which transported him and made him work is for a moment in his power, and who can listen to nothing but the frenzy within him. The tribute paid to Lord Mayo's merits by the Duke of Argyll and Mr. Gladstone in their respective Houses last evening will receive a warm assent from every one who has followed his course in India. He has succeeded far beyond the expectations entertained of him even by his own friends. His more valuable qualities have been developed by the exigencies of his great office to a higher degree than in the comparative obscurity of parliamentary life.

The Daily News remarks that many a Viceroy of India has fallen a victim to the stress and labour and exhaustion, physical as well as mental, of his duties as a ruler. This is the first time that the Houses of Parliament have received the news that a Governor-General of India has fallen by the hand of an assassin. When Lord Mayo was appointed Governor-General of India, it was undoubtedly thought that his friends had gone too far in their estimate of his merits. The appointment showed, however, that Mr. Disraeli had a truer knowledge of his friend and colleague than the public possessed or could possess. Lord Mayo surprised some of his political allies, as well as all his political opponents, by the general good sense and administrative ability which he displayed in India.

The Standard observes that seldom in our time has the death of one individual caused so deep and general an emotion. England is poorer by one brave heart and kindly spirit at a time when she sorely needs the services of her greatest and best. To India the loss is even more severe, and may be said to be irreparable. Glorious as is the roll of our Indian viceroys, it is doubtful whether any one of them has left a name so honourable to England in that office as the man of whom we have been robbed by the assassin's knife. There have been rulers greater, perhaps, in genius and in daring, but certainly not one who succeeded in earning the love and the confidence of the people under his rule so completely as did Lord Mayo during his five years' tenure of power. It is the one passage of practical administration in our days which has kept up the traditions of our ancient fame as rulers of a subject people, and which is wholly good, beneficent, and glorious. If it should turn out that this assassination is connected with any of the projects of the Mahomedan revivalists, the affair will doubtless assume a serious complexion.

The Telegraph holds that in the presence of two recent assassinations by natives of the same class and creed, we are entitled to dispute the hasty interpretation offered by Colonel Sykes. We are not sure, indeed (the Telegraph says) that Wahabee convicts have not been lately sent to Port Blair; and, at any rate, we are morally certain that every fanatic confined in the island, who chose to take the trouble, would be able to learn all that has happened in Lower Bengal, not excepting the violent death of Judge Norman. Lord Mayo was the last man in India, one would have said, to die by the blow of an assassin. Though sedulous in business, he seemed likely to return home with stores of knowledge and experience, and a mind hardened by the severe trials that attend the Indian rulers of to-day. He has met with another fate. He has been swept off by a rising wave of fanaticism, whose destructive vigour we cannot believe is exhausted; and his name alone, upon the illustrious roll, will be associated with a violent end. India will sincerely lament her great loss, and the serene and impartial engine of Government will roll on, doing justice, but indulging no foul spirit of revenge.

The Pall Mall Gazette thinks that the horrible story of Lord Mayo's assassination cannot at present be completely understood. But while this atrocity may possibly have (as Colonel Sykes asserted) no political significance at all, and probably has none of a direct kind, some of our contemporaries are certainly hasty in denying that it has any connection with the murder of Chief Justice Norman. It is likely, on the other hand, that the two crimes are very closely related to one another. Calcutta is the port from which convicts are shipped for the Andaman Islands, and their last place of detention on the Indian mainland is probably the Calcutta gaol. In that gaol the assassin of Mr. Norman was suffered to remain for several weeks after his conviction, in the hope (apparently a vain one) that something might be discovered by the police concerning his antecedents or associates. During the interval before his execution several relays of convicts would probably be sent on to the Andamans, and it would become known in the penal settlement that a Mahometan from the North-western frontier had succeeded in killing the most highly placed Englishman in Calcutta. Such intelligence would assuredly inflame the imagination and fanaticism of the convict who afterwards became Lord Mayo's murderer. He, too, was a Mahometan from the wild hills in the North-west. His hand had probably been long practised in homicide, and since the lenient (as it now appears, the unpardonably lenient) sentence of transportation had been passed upon him after his conviction for murder, it is likely the judge who tried him had regarded him as an untamed savage, scarcely to be judged by ordinary rules. Such a Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE ASSASSINATION OF LORD MAYO.

The Times says it would be useless to dissemble the painful impression the murder of Lord Mayo is likely to produce in India and at home. Coming close upon the murder of Mr. Justice Norman, it may arouse a suspicion that, though no actual conspiracy exists man, weary of his life in the convict settlement, taught from his childhood that the slaughter of an infidel was a passport to Paradise, bred in a part of India where homicide is an every-day occurrence, would probably look upon the visit of the Governor-General as a supernatural direction to repeat the deed of his fellow tribesman at Calcutta. It is nearly the most dismal reflection suggested by these assassinations that they are likely to propagate their kind.

The Echo holds that it would be rash and unjust to bespatter our Mahomedan subjects with suspicions of disloyalty or sedition. But the sect of the assassin, the opportunities which he must have had for imbibing Wahabeeism, the absence of private motives for the crime, the death of Justice Norman by the hand of a man of the same religious creed, will inspire Englishmen with a little disquietude. The splendid army which mustered at Delhi last month must dispel all dread of an important open revolt. That is out of the question. But what arms have we to oppose to assassination? The barbarian becomes as strong as the enlightened European when once he utterly loses love or care of life. When our punishments cease to be feared, what avail our superior prowess and skill? It is true that while human nature remains true to itself the number of fanatics must be limited—that is our safety. But it will be wisdom, in view of the proneness of Mahomedanism, to produce reckless men such as Shere Ali, and of Hindooism to breed a predatory bloodthirsty crew such as the Kookos, to do nothing needlessly to wound or ruffle the religious susceptibilities of our subjects. We tread on a pool of lava; let us not break the crust which time and our conquests have spread over it.

The Saturday Review holds that there is nothing in the assassin's antecedents to connect him in any way with the proceedings of Wahabee or any other fanatics. The condition of the Port Blair settlement must also be taken into consideration. The total absence of anything like discipline that had long prevailed there had caused the most serious apprehension to the higher authorities, and to Lord Mayo himself. This settlement is described by an Indian journal as "a paradise of rum-drinking and unlimited idleness." The convicts are said to have been in the habit of taking into their service the Sepoys who were supposed to guard them, and were free to draw for a gallon of rum at a time. Last year a Port Blair convict was convicted at Calcutta of having, after one of these drinking bouts, killed a fellow-prisoner, and he was recommended to mercy on the ground that the crime would not in all probability have been committed but for the disgraceful laxity of discipline and want of proper control over the convicts at Port Blair. The assassin of Lord Mayo had therefore been living for a long period in a society where every thought and purpose of crime had been allowed to grow unchecked, and where deeds of violence had at least the sanction of the connivance or neglect of the authorities. A man who commits a murder under such circumstances cannot be assumed to have anything in common with a fanatic like the assassin of Chief Justice Norman, who struck his blow in the midst of an orderly and calm society. A semi-barbarous borderer, nursed in legends of feuds and tribal murders, might easily have given way to the impulse of doing one more bloody deed, when the whole circumstances of his recent life had sapped any little reverence for good government that he might have had, and had made violence and revolt seem to him the natural course of daily existence. The instrument, too, with which Lord Mayo was killed, an ordinary table-knife, points strongly to the conclusion that the act was not, as has been suggested, the result of the promptings of any native agent belonging to a secret society of Mahomedan fanatics. A surer and more deadly weapon would have certainly been selected by a cool contriver of murder; nor does the statement of the murderer that he acted under the inspiration of God point to more than that he felt impelled to do something which he had not premeditated, and that assassination was an act capable of so many justifications that he easily reconciled an impulse to commit it with the theory, habitual to his barbarous mind, that everything done or happening suddenly is specially contrived by the Almighty.

INDIGESTION.—The popular and professional medicine is MORSON'S PEPIN, the active digestive principle of the gastric juice. In Powder, Lozenges, Globules, and as Wine.

CONSUMPTION.—One of the greatest results of the chemical progress is the adaptation of the active property obtained from the Pancreas, and prepared as MORSON'S PANCREATIC EMULSION and POWDER.
It enables the weakest stomachs to assimilate animal fat and oil, so essential to the constitution.

CHLORODYNE.—Morson's celebrated Anodyne is now being supplied to the Public.

GELATINE.—The purest preparation of this nutritious agent extant is Morson's.

All the above are carefully packed and shipped to

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS

Are an infallible remedy for bad legs and all kinds of wounds. The surprising sale of these invaluable medicines in every part of the civilised world is the most convincing proof of their efficacy. If further evidence be required, the long list of voluntary testimonials received from grateful patients in all quarters of the globe would amply supply it. They speedily cure bad legs, old wounds, scrofula, and diseases of the skin. Thousands of persons who had long and severely suffered from these dreadful maladies have been cured by these medicines after every other means had failed; and it is a fact beyond all doubt that there is no case, however obstinate or however long standing, which they fail to relieve.

Summary and Review.

Now that the Indian mails appear to arrive regularly on Monday mornings, the publication of Allen's Mail will in future take place, as in fact it has generally done for some time past, on Monday afternoon instead of Tuesday.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Feb. 5; Agra and Madras, Feb. 3; Calcutta, Feb. 2.

THE papers give some details of the late Viceroy's movements in British Burmah. He arrived at Rangoon on Sunday the 28th January, and landed in state the next evening; the shipping in the river being decked out with flags and the wharf itself brilliantly decorated. A large crowd greeted his landing. At five arches set up along the road by as many native guilds, addresses were duly presented. Nearly the whole distance of three miles to the house of the Chief Commissioner was lined with spectators. A reception in the evening was followed by a levée the next afternoon and a ball at night. On Wednesday Lord Mayo went over the new public buildings and the jail, and then with Lady Mayo distributed prizes at the Roman Catholic School. At eleven his Lordship held a durbar while his Countess received a large party of Burmese ladies. Nineteen native officials were honoured with chains, medals, and gold cloths for good service done to the State.

In his speech on this occasion Lord Mayo emphatically warned his hearers against all idea of seeing Pegu or Tenasserim restored to Burmah Proper:—

Let no man tell you that any change is likely to occur. Arracan, Pegu, and Tenasserim are British, and British they will remain for many generations of men, but we rule you only for your good. We govern in order that you should live in peace, prosperity, and happiness, that you should be free to come and go, that whatever you possess should be secure, that all your rights should be preserved, and your national customs and habits respected.

On the 1st February he visited the various mission schools. At noon he received the native officers of regiments and several native deputations. In the afternoon Lord and Lady Mayo gave a dance-party on board the Glasgow. Next day he went over the rice-mills, barracks, and public institutions. A deputation of Rangoon merchants then waited on his Lordship with a statement of the reforms they thought needful in the interests of local trade. In answer to their demand for an extension of the Coolie Contract Law of Assam to British Burmah, Lord Mayo remarked that the whole question required delicate handling. With regard to the projected Prome Railway, he replied that the Government had completed all preliminary inquiries, and would announce their decision soon after his return to Calcutta. He touched on the difficulty of passing a Bankruptcy Law that would apply equally well to towns and country districts, held out little hope of improving the telegraphic communication with Bassein and the shipping in the bay, and declared that the present state of Indian finance would not justify an early repeal of the rice-duties.

AFTER taking part in a splendid entertainment given on the night of February 2 by the people of Rangoon, Lord Mayo started the next morning for Maulmain. Just before his departure he received an embassy with a complimentary letter from the King of Ava. At noon on the 4th Lord Mayo, accompanied by Mr. Eden, landed at the capital of Tenasserim, where he met with "a quiet but cordial reception."

THE sham fighting around Toglakabad ended in a drawn battle between Sir H. Tombs and General McMurdo; both of whom are thought to have done well, although the palm for good strategy has been popularly assigned to General Travers, whose plans in the earlier manœuvres had been deranged by the over eagerness of his lieutenants. We are inclined to doubt the sufficiency of that excuse to account for Sir H. Tombs's frequent successes. On the 27th the manœuvres wound up with a grand military display under Lord Napier, for the edification of the active-minded King of Siam, who left camp soon afterwards on a visit to Bombay.

A Times telegram of February 22 reports General Brownlow as encamped on the 18th at Chamgoomana, between the Koladyne and Dallesaree rivers. Two of the most powerful chiefs among the Northern Howlong tribes had made their submission, sending in their captives, and pledging themselves to keep the peace and grant free access to their country for the future. On the same date General Bouchier had reached the chief village of the Lalboorahs, in which were discovered traces of their connection with last year's raids. The village, which contained 500 houses, and had been abandoned by its inmates at the orders of their chief, was destroyed. The scenery and climate are described as "perfect." General Bouchier's camp was then pitched at 500 (more probably 5,000) feet above the sea, in latitude 23 deg. 26 sec. north, and longitude 93 deg. 25 sec. east.

ACCORDING to latest telegrams, the tribes of Vonelel have surrendered unconditionally to General Bouchier, who began his return journey on the 21st February. Lalboorah, who still held his mother's village in a strong position, 6,000 feet high, was bidden to surrender his arms, give hostages, and pay a fine in war-gongs, ivory, &c.

FROM the latest telegrams regarding the assassination of Lord Mayo, we learn that he arrived at Port Blair at nine A.M. on the 8th of February. His private secretary, Major Burne, having settled the plan of inspection with General Stewart, the new Superintendent of the Andaman Islands, and the arrangements for the guard having been duly sanctioned by the Viceroy himself, the latter set out between eleven and twelve o'clock to inspect the whole of Ross Island, in company with General Stewart, Mr. Ellis, the Chief Commissioner of Burmah, his own personal staff, and some other gentlemen. A strong guard of Native Infantry and Police attended him so closely that he murmured something about the excessive care they seemed to take of him. At two P.M. he returned on board, but landed again half-an-hour later, in company with the gentlemen who had shared his morning round through Viper Island and Chatham. On this occasion he was still more closely guarded than before. By five P.M. the day's work was over, but the Viceroy, in an evil hour, proposed a visit to Hope Town and Mount Harriet. Mr. Ellis, who was lame, remained behind with one of his aides-de-camp, Captain Gregory; all the others, with part of the escort, accompanying Lord Mayo. The party reached the top of the hill just before sunset. After a halt of ten minutes they walked down again, the Viceroy well guarded by his friends and followers. Darkness came on just after they had reached the foot of the hill, and they pursued their journey with lighted torches. The only convicts to be seen were off the road, working under their overseers. By the time Lord Mayo reached the pier it was a quarter to seven, and quite dark. The party were only twenty-five yards from the boat when General Stewart, with the Viceroy's leave, dropped a little behind to give some order. At this time the armed escort kept on either side of Lord Mayo, followed by the police; while Major Burne, Colonel Jervois, Lieut. Hawkins, and a native body-servant were close beside or behind him. The sailors of the Glasgow were standing at the end of the pier in his front. Lord Mayo had only advanced a few paces up the pier when his murderer sprang upon him out of the darkness, and stabbed him twice, on the top of the left shoulder and under the right shoulder-blade. After running a few paces forward, the Viceroy fell over the steep stone side of the pier into the shallow water on the left; but, getting on his legs again, was helped out. Although the blood flowed fast from his wounds, he walked firmly, and, feeling his shoulder, said, "I don't think I am much hurt." As the bleeding grew worse, he was laid on a cart, and his wounds were bound up; after which he begged to be taken on board the Glasgow. While they were carrying him to the boat he twice asked to have his head raised. He never spoke again, and before reaching the ship he had breathed his last. The assassin had meanwhile been seized and safely guarded.

THERE is no truth, according to the same telegram, in the report that Sher Ali is related to the murderer of Chief-Justice Norman; nor is there "any reason to believe that there is any connection between them." Possibly not; and yet, if it be true that they were fellow-clansmen, it is not unlikely that Sher Ali might have been impelled to commit one more murder in order to avenge the death of Mr. Norman's assassin. Anyhow, we cannot as yet assume, with Mr. J. Strachey, that there is "no reason to give the murder any political significance." It is all very well to say that the assassin belongs to a class whose very profession may be said to be murder; but these are the very men whom political plotters can turn most readily to account. Nor can much weight be given in this connection to the previous facts of Sher Ali's life. Even if he did fight against the Sitana fanatics, it proves nothing one way or the other; as a "General Officer," writing to the Times, has pointed out. Like all men of Arab stock, these Afreedies are notoriously fond of fighting for fighting's sake, and it is a common thing for men of the same tribe to turn their arms against each other. The very details already given of the murder at Port Blair seem to bear against the hypothesis of a suddenly conceived attack. It is hardly possible to doubt that the murderer must have been lurking about somewhere in wait for the right moment to deal his blow. It may of course have been dealt from a private motive; but so far the evidence leans rather to the opposite conclusion. We are glad however to be assured that "everything is quiet everywhere, and there is no cause for apprehension."

DURING the 19th and 20th of this month the mortal remains of the late Viceroy were visited by a large number of people. On the 21st a solemn funeral service was held over them in front of Government House, before their removal in her Majesty's ship Daphne as far as Saugor, whence the Glasgow is to bring them home to their last resting-place in Ireland. At the Custom-house and the jetty a procession was formed like that of the previous Saturday, but on a somewhat smaller scale, on account of the shorter journey. All classes of the people took part in it; the roads were lined with troops, and the Calcutta Volunteers escorted the body. On her way home the Glasgow will touch at Bombay, whence Lady Mayo will embark on her sad voyage to England.

IN a letter to the Broad Arrow "Pro Bono Publico" points out, as so many have done before him, the absurdity of keeping unemployed officers in India, because these have no choice between a very small pension now and colonel's allowances a few years hence. We suppose there must be some wise, if utterly inscrutable reason for a course so burdensome to the finances of India, and so damaging to the efficiency of the Indian Army. There are hundreds of these unemployed field-officers, who are sick of doing nothing in India on a handsome pay, and would gladly forego the prospect of colonel's allowances for a pension of five or six hundred down. But it seems to be considered truer economy to compel them to live on a thousand or twelve hundred a-year in India for no earthly advantage to the State, rather than tempt them home by an offer of half their present allowances. It is all right, no doubt, and we have unlimited faith in the decrees of an official providence; but there are some perversely stupid people who cannot be made to see—at least without further explanation—why two and two should make four in one country and five in another.

WE note that Mr. Arthur Hobhouse, Q.C., has been appointed Law Member of the Viceroy's Council in India, in the room of Mr. Fitzjames Stephen. The early retirement of the latter gentleman is much to be regretted; but his place, we trust, will not be inadequately filled by his successor, whose name stands high, we believe, in his own profession for hard-working ability. Mr. Winterbotham, to whom the post was first offered, appears very naturally to have preferred the stir and opportunities of political life at home. It is seldom indeed that English lawyers of known ability can be induced to enter late in life on an Indian career. But is there no field for choice among members of the Indian Bar. If more prizes were open to them in the public service of India, more men of high character and good capacity would be induced to practise in the Indian law courts; and it cannot be denied that an Indian training would qualify some of them for the work of framing and devising laws for the people of India. There are even now several gentlemen, such as Mr. Prichard or Mr. Bruce Norton, who must be every way fitted for the post that has been once more offered to a homebred lawyer; men who have more or less thoroughly explored the recesses of native society, and would therefore have far more practical sympathy with native feeling than most Englishmen, whose studies have been pursued at home. Mr. Prichard especially combines breadth of culture and varied experience with all the legal knowledge required for such a post; and his presence in the Supreme Council would have added a new and desirable element to those of which it is usually composed.

IN giving details of Lord Northbrook's past career, some of our contemporaries have fallen into a curious confusion of dates and offices. The new Viceroy began life as Mr. Baring, private secretary to Lord Taunton at the Board of Trade. He next served in the same capacity at the Home Office under Sir G. Grey. He became private secretary to Lord Halifax, first at the Board of Control and afterwards at the Admiralty. In 1857 he entered the House of Commons, and became Junior Lord of the Admiralty. Two years later he was Under Secretary for India. In 1861 he went to the War Office, but returned in six months to his former post, where he remained until 1864. He then undertook the same post at the Home Office. In 1865 he succeeded his father, the Sir Francis Baring of former days, in the earldom. In 1868 Lord Northbrook went out of office with the Russell Ministry; but reappeared as Under Secretary at the War Office when Mr. Gladstone returned to power at the

In a lecture delivered on Friday at the United Service Institution, Captain Ross, R.A., threw a strange light on some of our recent failures in Indian public works. In order to enforce the need for greater chemical knowledge in officers entrusted with the supervision of public works, he cited the contrast between the strength of old native buildings which have stood and will stand for centuries, and the constant tendency of our fine new barracks to tumble down. An inquiry into one of these failures resulted in showing that the mortar used in building the barracks contained only five per cent. of lime. This led, as our readers may remember, to Lord Mayo's demand for information as to the best materials for making good cement. To us at the time it seemed strange that such a question should have to be asked in such a country as India, where old buildings and good lime have always abounded. We now learn from Captain Ross that the cause of the above-named failures was really due less to native rascality than to our own officers' ignorance of chemistry. It turns out that the well-known kunka, used in India for road-metal, and by the Public Works Officers for making mortar, is not carbonate of lime, nor lime in any shape, although it possesses some of the properties of lime. Under the action of rain the cement made from this kunka is rapidly washed away, and the building tumbles down. It is pleasant to think that if English officers had understood chemistry, a good many millions might not have been thrown away on huge buildings which not only serve as heat-traps, but fall to pieces in wet weather. If all this be true, it is time that something should be done to render these public works failures impossible for the future.

The recent Kuka outbreak has called forth much speculation as to the origin and aims of the new fanatical movement whence it sprang. No new facts however of any significance appear to have turned up in this connection to supplement the sketch we gave of the Kuka movement in our issue of Nov. 7 last; a sketch which was afterwards reprinted in the Times.

VERE HENRY, Lord Hobart, is the eldest son of the sixth Earl of Buckingham. He was born in 1818, and took a second class in classics at Oxford in 1840. In 1842 he was appointed a clerk in the Board of Trade. In 1854 and 1855 he was private secretary to Sir George Grey, who was Secretary of State first for Colonial and afterwards for Home Affairs. Lord Hobart retired from the Board of Trade in 1863, and was subsequently appointed Director-general of the Imperial Ottoman Bank at Constantinople, which position he resigned last year. He married in 1853 a daughter of Bishop Carr, formerly of Bombay.

BOTH columns of the Loshai Expedition were making satisfactory progress through country more and more difficult. On the 25th January General Bouchier was attacked on the line of march by a strong force of Poiboy's and Lalboorah's men. In spite of the rocks and dense woods around them, our troops "behaved nobly," the 44th N.I. closing with the Kookies and killing twelve of them on one spot alone. They were followed up to the village of Koongnoon, 5,500 feet above the sea, with the road thither strongly stockaded in several places. Nothing however could stand the rush made by our sepoy, and the village was soon in their possession. Two men of the mountain battery were badly wounded, one of the 44th, one policeman, and three coolies, while three of the 44th and one coolie were slain. The General himself was wounded in the arm and hand. On the 26th Colonel Roberts, with 100 infantry and two guns, attacked and burnt a large village, called Taikoom. Strong stockades guarded the approaches, but the enemy, in spite of their numbers, soon retreated into the village, which stood as usual on a high hill. At 1,200 yards our steel guns made excellent practice. Under cover of their fire the infantry went forward, and the village was soon taken without the loss of a man on our side. In this day's marching the troops and guns had to cross a mountain six thousand feet high. Some of our own smoothbore ammunition was found on the dead bodies.

On the 21st January General Brownlow attacked and stormed the village of Lal Jeeka, ten miles north of Syloo Savoonga, with the help of Colonel Hill's guns, which made good practice at a thousand yards. This village too was strongly stockaded, and but for the guns its capture would have cost many lives. General Nuthall on the 25th sends the news already telegraphed hither of the arrival of 207 escaped captives—men, women, and children—in his camp at Manipoor.

COLONEL POLLOCK and his party left Sindh a few days before the departure of the mail for Khehat, via Gundava, escorted by forty troopers of the Sindh Horse. They had not gone far before they were fired upon by a party of roving Boogties, whose attack however seems to have done no harm.

THE NEW VICEROY.

INDIA is about to offer the unusual spectacle of three new Governors entering on office at the same time. Fortunately for all concerned a change in appearance so extensive can now be effected with an ease and safety far less predicable fifty years ago. The wheels of Indian government continue in these days to work pretty smoothly, whoever at any moment happens to superintend the whole machine. In Bombay, as our readers know, Sir Seymour Fitzgerald will shortly be replaced by Sir Philip Wodehouse. Lord Hobart has now been selected to govern Madras in the room of Lord Napier, who has already exceeded his term of office by a year. And now it has been finally settled that the Viceroyship vacant through Lord Mayo's premature death shall be filled up by Lord Northbrook, the able Under-Secretary for War to Mr. Cardwell. Of course the Standard quarrels with the choice, as it would quarrel with any other act of the present Ministry, and much as the Liberal Press quarrelled with the appointment of Lord Mayo. To political partisans any "spirit of health" introduced to their notice by the opposite party, would seem better than a "goblin damned." If Lord Salisbury were willing to sacrifice everything for the good of his country, we might have made some little demur to the preference of party over public claims. But as Lord Salisbury would hardly dream of carrying his self-denial to so angelic a pitch, we may assume that the Ministry have made fair use of their judgment in offering the vacant berth to so able and tried a colleague as Lord Northbrook. It is generally, in fact, a matter of pure guess-work whether this or that person is likely to make a good Governor-General of India. How many, even of Lord Mayo's well-wishers, could have forecast the full success of his Indian administration from their knowledge of his previous career? Was it anything but a happy fluke that led to the appointment of Lord Dalhousie? Lord Ellenborough's training at the Board of Control would hardly have prepared us for his failure as an Indian Viceroy. If administrative experience counts for anything, we may hope much from the selection of Lord Northbrook. As Private Secretary of the Indian Board to Sir Charles Wood, the Hon. Mr. Baring gained his first acquaintance with Indian affairs in the days before the Mutiny, an acquaintance which he renewed soon after the downfall of the East India Company. When the Liberals returned to office in 1859, he became the first Liberal Under-Secretary of State for India, an appointment which, except for a brief interval, he held for about five years. During the last three years Lord Northbrook, as Mr. Cardwell's subaltern in the War Office, has evinced no common aptitude for the business of a great department under circumstances unusually trying. The clearness with which last year he expounded his chief's policy of military reform strengthened the good impression his official dealings had already produced, and set people wondering how much longer he was to remain in the lower ranks of the Government. Only the other day it seemed doubtful whether he could be spared from the work of remodelling the military system of England in order to hold the reins of empire over England's great dependency. That question however has been settled in favour of India's claim to the services of the best available ruler. Lord Northbrook goes out to his new government in the fulness of his bodily and mental powers, with a ripe experience of public duties, a high character for general statesmanship, and much special acquaintance with Indian politics. The question of the immediate future for India is, we believe, the economical question; and with this the new Viceroy is eminently fitted to cope. Should nothing unpleasant occur to cut short his term of office, we may reasonably hope for a prosperous issue to Lord Northbrook's latest and highest venture.

THE INDIAN MOHAMMEDANS.

THE literature of the Wahabi Revival has been enriched by a telling article in the last number of Fraser from the pen of the scholarly Mr. Gifford Palgrave. Following the train of thought started by Mr. Hunter's book, Mr. Palgrave enlarges, mainly from his own experience, on the marked change of feeling which has come of late years over that part of the Mohammedan world, which is comprised under the name of Turkey. What Mr. Hunter has written of our Indian Mussulmans may be applied in great measure, with the needful differences, to the Ottoman Empire, where "similar causes have given rise to similar difficulties, and have necessitated measures bearing a considerable resemblance to some of those suggested by Mr. Hunter, for the disentanglement of our own knots." A hundred years ago the decline of Islam in the Turkish Empire seemed to border on dissolution. New nationalities, indifferent, alien, and even hostile to the creed of Mahomet, were springing up everywhere; Mohammedans themselves were falling away from the strict rules of their faith; the schools and colleges of Mohammedan law and doctrine were fast decaying from sheer neglect;—in short, it seemed as if total eclipse was overwhelming the Crescent.

A hundred years later, and what a change! The Wahabi revival has spread throughout the Mohammedan world. In Turkey its influence has nearly extinguished the old movement in favour of Western learning and Western ideas. The "Rushdee," or public schools, have been nearly emptied of non-Mohammedan scholars, Turkish, Persian, and Arabic have entirely displaced the European tongues, and history and science are taught on Mohammedan principles. The use of strong drinks is dying out among all classes, the Ramadan is once more strictly observed; Europeans and native Christians are again disappearing from the public service and the various professions; new mosques, colleges, chapels, schools are rising everywhere; and pilgrims in ever growing numbers throng to the holy places. A religion in short which underlies the whole social and political life of its professors has resumed all its old ascendancy over Mohammedans of every sect and class. This, according to Mr. Palgrave, is the fact which must be faced by Western observers not only in Turkey, but in India also and even more steadily there. For that purpose he would have Anglo-Indian statesmen "take a leaf from the book of our Ottoman friends, in respect of law-suits and contracts in which Moslems only are concerned." All such questions should be tried and settled, he thinks, in Courts cognisant of Moslem civil law, and regulated as far as possible in Moslem fashion; the law-officers of such Courts being invested with all the sanction our own Indian Government can give. "A kazeel-kuza't in each Presidency, with a Sheykh-Islam at Calcutta, nominated by Government, salaried by Government, dependent on Government, and removable by Government," with power to choose subordinates subject to the Viceroy's approval, would go far to keep in check "the most dangerous element in our Indian Empire." The same end might also be furthered by giving the Mohammedans law-colleges and schools conducted under English supervision.

Some, at any rate, of these proposals, agree in spirit with Lord Mayo's own Resolution of August last, in which he laid down rules for "a more systematic encouragement and recognition of Arabic and Persian literature," for the good of the higher, and of vernacular teaching for the lower classes of Mohammedans. The question again of setting up a Mohammedan Kazi is one of mere expediency, with which no sort of religious scruples on our side should be allowed to interfere. On another point relevant to the main question, the writer of another paper in the same number of Fraser makes some quietly cutting remarks.* We refer to the mis-appropriation of Mohammedan funds to non-Mohammedan purposes, against which both Dr. Hunter and Colonel Nassau Lees had already lifted up their voices. Here is a case in which justice and expediency alike demand an early change for the better. To apply funds specially bequeathed for a certain purpose to uses wholly antagonistic to that purpose may well be regarded by the Mohammedans of Bengal as "a swindle from first to last."

Owing to a quarrel between the Mussulman trustees of a large estate bequeathed by a rich Mohammedan of Hooghly for pious purposes, the Indian Government assumed charge of the estate, and out of its funds they endowed an English College, the head of which, an Englishman utterly ignorant of Persian or Arabic, receives £1,500 a-year for teaching things so hateful to Mussulman notions, that out of three hundred boys in college, only three are Mohammedans. The honesty of such a proceeding needs no comment. It is hardly to be expected that the rulers of India would upset the whole of their school system in order to please a minority of their subjects; but it might with reason have been supposed that even Mohammedans would not be denied fair play by a Government which plumes itself on showing equal justice to all races and creeds alike. However hopeless our attempts to secure the loyalty of any particular class of native subjects, we can at least avoid those petty meanesses which cause worse irritation than wrongs on a large scale. It is well too, as the same writer points out, to remember that the more carefully we educate the natives of India, the more keenly will they resent the hardship of a system which steadily excludes them from the higher ranks of the public service in their own country. This is one of the toughest problems which call for early solution at our hands, with an eye to the due continuance of our Indian rule.

Correspondence.

THE LATE LORD MAYO.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—At a time when both England and India are lamenting the sad tragedy of the 8th inst., I may, perhaps, be allowed to pay an humble tribute to the memory of the late accomplished and deservedly beloved Viceroy.

From the time that Lord Mayo assumed the reins of government, everyone interested in India must have observed the indefatigable industry, the great ability, and the extensive knowledge which he had brought to bear upon the investigation and settlement of all great questions which had come before the Council. Although Lord Mayo's Viceroyalty has been of short duration, yet few will bear comparison with his, if regard be had to the public transactions by which it had been signalled. Nor can any Indian Viceroy within the last eighty years compare with the lamented Viceroy himself, if the personal energy and intervention of the man be considered. Viewed by themselves, the events of his rule are important; but when it is known how much their course was directed by himself, how minute was his attention to the details of every plan, and how vigilant his supervision of its execution, the admiration claimed for success becomes due to the energy and industry by which the success was won, and a vague wonder warms into a feeling of personal respect. No Viceroy has as yet exhibited so much warm interest in native education as Lord Mayo did. He at one glance perceived the necessity of encouraging the revival of Arabic, Sanskrit, and Persian Studies. He fully understood how an English education would, in all probability, corrupt most of the lower classes of Indians, instead of making them useful members of society. To use the words of the late Hon. Sir John Shore, a splendid statesman and an able writer, whose memory is to this day dearly and gratefully remembered in India:—

The Bengalis are generally allowed to be the lowest in the habits and principles of all the people of India, and of the Bengalis the inhabitants of Calcutta are perhaps the worst, who have for the most part acquired the bad habits of both nations and the good of neither.

Lord Mayo devoted all the energies of his mind, every minute and every hour of his time, every thought, and every inspiration, to the discharge of his onerous functions.

The close of Mr. Disraeli's speech to his constituents, on being re-elected, at Buckinghamshire on the 19th November, 1868, has been fully realised:—

I say that a state of affairs so dangerous was never encountered with more firmness, but, at the same time, with greater magnanimity; that never were foreign efforts so completely controlled, and baffled, and defeated—(cheers)—as was this Fenian conspiracy by the Government of Ireland, by the Lord-Lieutenant, and greatly also by the Earl of Mayo. (Cheers.) Upon that nobleman for his sagacity, for his judgment, fine temper, and knowledge of men, her Majesty has been pleased to confer the office of Viceroy of India, and as Viceroy of India I believe he will earn a reputation that his country will honour, and that he has before him a career which will equal that of the most eminent Governor-general who has preceded him. (Cheers.)

His death will be felt by all as a national calamity, and to those who knew and appreciated his merits it will come home as a private misfortune. While upon this subject, I may be permitted to add that it would be most desirable to establish a European Body-guard to attend upon future Viceroy in the East, as such a measure would not only prove a proper precaution, but would also greatly tend to engender a feeling of proper respect and awe in the Oriental mind towards the chief representative of the British Crown.—I am, your most obedient and humble servant,

A MILITIA FOR INDIA.—II.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I beg to call your earnest attention to the Duke of Argyll's letter of the 6th September last, in reply to Lord Mayo's letter of the 23rd June. I cannot recollect whether you have offered any remarks on it.

As this letter was written in Council, it contains, I presume, the opinion of the majority of the members of the Home Government.

It is seriously proposed to disband 9,000 of our well-disciplined native soldiers.

The Duke—when in paragraph 2 he declares that the most approved mode of maintaining an army on a peace footing is to reduce the rank and file—appears to have lost sight of the fact that in India the recruiting is among conquered races, who must be bribed highly to take our side in a time of danger. How can we offer high pay to raw recruits without increasing in a proportionate degree the pay of the whole Army? A saving of £90,000 a-year may cost us ninety millions sterling.

It is impossible to compare recruiting in England among a patriotic and loyal race with recruiting in India among conquered races, the bravest of whom are anxious to turn us out of the country, and govern it on their own account.

Hasty recruiting in a time of war in India is a dangerous expedient. Brave mercenaries can usually make more by plundering than by enlisting on the side of order. In June, 1857, this reason for not enlisting on our side was impudently avowed by many.

The native idea of honesty and honour is to be true to salt—of treachery, to be untrue to salt; that is to say, native public opinion declares that a sepoy who has been serving under our colours is a blackguard if he deserts us. But it is now proposed to disband 9,000 of these well-disciplined sepoys, whom native public opinion will excuse if they fight against us after they have been disbanded. The contract having been broken, each party is considered to be free from its engagements. How many soldiers does the Home Government suppose it could collect at Peshawur without leaving any portion of India defenceless, or open to the attacks of banditti? It is our duty to defend our loyal native subjects from the attacks of robbers, and not leave them helpless, as we did the inhabitants of the Nerbuddah territories in 1842.

The thirteenth and fourteenth centuries saw countless hordes of plunderers from Central Asia overrun some of the fairest parts of the world. Were similar hordes to be assisted with arms of precision, our encounter with them on the North-West frontier would be terrific, assisted as they might be by an unknown number of Mohammedan rebels in our rear. A few years ago the Indian Army had a taste of the valour of Mohammedan highlanders in the Umbeyle Pass campaign. Brasser's Sikhs, the bravest of the brave of our native soldiers, can tell thrilling stories of the Boneiree warriors, who called them golden birds, and thought them fair game.

Lord Mayo refused to reduce the native army as requested by the Home Government, but will his successor be equally firm? Lord Northbrook as Under-Secretary has learnt to obey, but not to command. He is a civilian, and not a soldier. In the history of British India we find abundant proof that military Governors-General of moderate ability have been more successful than the most talented civilians. Lord Cornwallis and Sir Henry Hardinge were not men of genius, but they governed India very successfully; on the other hand, Warren Hastings, Lord Wellesley and Lord Dalhousie, all men of rare ability, were constantly fettered by their ignorance of military matters. Lord Wellesley by giving carte blanche to his military subordinates brought the Exchequer into a state of insolvency, while Lord Dalhousie in his efforts to secure a healthy financial condition failed in securing efficiency in the army. One of the Indian papers well remarks that an army which sees the spectre of reduction hanging over its head must be an army that lacks spirit, zeal and hope.—Your obedient servant,

SIR,—As the Mohammedan sect of the Wahabis are exciting some degree of anxious attention at the present time, the following notice of their rise and progress may prove acceptable to those who are interested in the affairs of India.

It was at the commencement of the last century that an ambitious fanatic named Abd-el-Wahab (the servant of Him who gives [us] everything) appeared in his native province of Nedjid, in Arabia, as the reformer of the national religion. He was born about the end of the seventeenth century and received his first education in the schools of Basrah, where he also studied divinity. To complete his education he repaired to the then celebrated cities of Ispahan, Khorassan, Bagdad, and Basrah. Having been disgusted and provoked, when in Persia, at the changes which had there been introduced into Islamism, and which he considered as idolatrous corruptions, he, in his return home, as summed the character of a religious reformer—a Mohammedan Luther in fact—and, in that capacity, attracted the notice, and afterwards, the support of Mohammed-Ebn-Sa'ud, the head and warlike chief of a tribe, and who resided at Derayah. Political interests were thus joined to religious reform, and it was resolved to unite the Bedouins in a confederation similar to that established by Mohammed. We leave it to others to describe, in detail, the particular tenets of the followers of Wahab; suffice it to say, that the perfect unity of the Godhead is their fundamental principle; that while they receive the Koran, they utterly repudiate the fables and false glosses by which, as they affirm, it is corrupted; that they deem all the peoples who differ in any respect from the plain and literal meaning of the Koran as infidels, and maintain that the making war upon them is the imperious duty of all true Mohammedans.

But besides being regarded as a Mohammedan Luther, Abd-el-Wahab may be considered as a second Leo III., of iconoclastic celebrity; for with the same horror in which the latter held the images of Christ, the Virgin, and Saints, the former regarded the tombs and monuments of departed saints, and ordered their destruction; thus, when the Wahabis in April, 1803, became masters of Mecca and Medina, they demolished all the magnificent sepulchres of the family and the immediate followers of the Prophet, not respecting even the tomb of the venerated Khadijah, completing their sacrilegious work by plundering the holy place of its treasures.
